The Treasury was faced with obligations coming due in 1923 to the amount of over $7,000,000,000; Victory notes, nearly $4,000,000,000; unfunded debts of $2,500,000,000; and war-saving stamps of $650,000,000. The Secretary of the Treasury proceeded to take them up by issuing series A and B for 1924, 1925, 1926, 1927, and so forth, in such amounts that the Government, if at all possible, may meet them as they come due. All this has been accomplished, every issue has been oversubscribed, the Treasury has been relieved of embarrassment, the Government obligations have been either retired or funded, the public debt, which at its peak reached twenty-six billions, reduced by at least $3,000,000,000—to $23,077,000,000 October 31, 1922—all without disturbance to business or interference with the normal activities of the people, done so smoothly that financial circles are scarcely aware of the prodigious enterprise.

A deficit of over $600,000,000 which threatened us nine months ago has faded and there is now a promise of a surplus, thanks to a business administration, for the first time run on a budget basis. These are the bases of business return. The best authority on business matters in the country, such as Babson, pronounce the comeback the most complete and quickest of any economic recovery from a nation-wide depression in our history. The recovery was from an almost complete overturn of industry and was accomplished by wise financing, a program of rigid economy, and sound enactment of tax revision, protective tariff, and budgetary legislation. Measured by actual results known to all, the first two years of the Harding administration of the Treasury under the personal direction of Andrew Mellon has no equal since the days of Hamilton.

REORGANIZATION OF THE ARMY AND NAVY.

The Army and Navy have been reorganized from a war to a peace basis. This involved, as applied to the Army, restriction of the use of transportation and revision of allowances, reduction of civilian overhead personnel, relinquishment of real estate and military camps, declaration of surplus property for disposal, new plans for concentrated storage of reserve supplies, increased tours of foreign service, and decrease of transferring troops and individuals, settlement of claims against the Government, general consolidation of operating agencies, and so forth.

The National Guard was reorganized and new contact with the Regular Army has been effected. The Organized Reserves are in the skeleton stage to insure a better defense in the future. Summer camps have been planned for enlisted men in training. The Army in peace time under present plans will become a great agency for construction of public works and enhance the public welfare by its expert ability. All this could be said about the Navy also.

The Regular Army has been reduced to 127,000 men and 12,000 officers, while the Navy has been reduced to 86,000 men and 6,000 officers, at a saving in these two departments of hundreds of millions of dollars.

THE DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE.

The Department of Justice was faced with the most prodigious volume of adjustments growing out of war contracts. This stupendous work was in addition to the usual routine of a Cabinet office. Immediately after March 4, 1921, the Attorney General began an investigation of the pending questions growing out of the congressional investigations of war contracts. Congress voted $500,000 to aid in the task, which was beyond the resources of the department.

The war transactions section of the Department of Justice, with an advisory council consisting of two former judges and an ex-Senator, was created and began to function on June 1, 1922. In November civil suits were instituted against the builders of six Army cantonments to recover for the Government an aggregate sum of $21,000,000. Within a few days four additional suits were filed against camp contractors, bringing the total of the Government's claims against these contractors for alleged fraud, negligence, conspiracy, and connivance to defraud, to over $50,000,000.

Later, on evidence presented by the department, the special Federal grand jury in the District of Columbia returned true bills of indictment against a large number of individuals and corporations charging criminal conspiracy to rob the Government of millions of dollars in the giving out of war contracts. All of the above suits and criminal actions have been placed on the calendars of the United States district courts throughout the country to be pressed to an early conclusion by the Attorney General and his special assistants.

This department, by Federal injunction, ended the strike of 400,000 railroad workers and restored the transportation systems of the country to a condition of normalcy after months of economic paralysis.

A suit in equity was filed for approximately $1,500,000 against half a score of individuals and corporations to recover the value of 140,000,000 feet of lumber, the property of the Government, alleged to have been illegally acquired by them through connivance in its sale as surplus war material, and criminal action was brought against the same individuals.

Besides the civil and criminal suits against the war contractors the Department of Justice in the past year has recovered into the United States Treasury more than $3,000,000 through settlement by agreement of minor suits begun against war contractors and others.

Aside from the so-called war frauds cases, the collection of fines in criminal cases, including food and drug, national prohibition, and so forth, deposited to the credit of the Treasurer of the United States, it is estimated will approximate $5,000,000, collected in about 25,000 criminal cases.

During the past year civil suits to which the United States was a party were instituted to the number of 9,646 and more than 8,000 were terminated. There are now pending in the courts something like 12,000 civil cases.

More than 60,000 criminal cases were begun. During the year about 55,000 were terminated. There are now pending about 65,000 such cases.

From these prosecutions and adjudications nearly four and a half million dollars were realized by the Government from the civil suits alone, while fines and penalties also were realized, making a total of about $8,000,000.

More than 400 separate and distinct cases of importance, representing billions of dollars, are undergoing liquidation.

The greater number of precedents established by the courts during the year coming under the trading with the enemy act have been favorable to the Government.

Prosecution of antitrust law violators has continued throughout the year. Jail sentences or fines, and in some instances both, were imposed upon 63 corporations or individuals in suits successfully prosecuted by the department. The jail sentences were the first ever secured in antitrust cases. About 36 cases are now pending.

During the year 1922, $10,000,000 were saved to the Government in a single group of admiralty cases defended by the department and decided in the Government's favor. These suits comprised the "Western Maid" group, of which there were approximately 200 cases.

To relieve the congestion in the court dockets 23 additional trial judges and one additional circuit judge were authorized by Congress.

The Government during the past two years won a greater percentage of suits brought by importers than it did prior to the establishment of the customs division of the Department of Justice, with a saving of time and expense.

Two hundred and sixty-two suits against the United States in which the claimants asked a total of $37,837,799.53 were disposed of by the Court of Claims, of which total the court allowed the claimants an aggregate sum of only $1,982,444.23.

Due to cumulative legislation in recent time the duties of the Department of Justice are constantly increasing, involving necessary action looking to cases arising out of automobile thefts, the control and destruction of the narcotic drug and intoxicating liquor traffic, the enforcement of the national prohibition act; also cases arising from the patent, trade-mark, and copyright laws, and entirely new problems affecting the Constitution and the interpretation and construction of the law under recent taxation legislation.

The constitutionality of the Volstead Act, the Lever Act, the corrupt practices act, the future trading act, and the interpretation of the income and excess profits tax laws, the woman's suffrage amendment, the transportation act of 1920, the merchant marine act, the packers and stockyards act have all been successfully handled by the department before the Supreme Court of the United States.

Cases involving billions of dollars have been dealt with, war-time claims alone filed in the Court of Claims amounting to $300,000,000, while claims totaling $5,000,000,000 were filed in the War Department.

Through the criminal division the Department of Justice collected in fines and penalties $3,921,454.07 for 1921, or a million and one-half more than was collected in 1920; 53,155 out of 60,722 criminal cases were terminated during the year 1922.

The department has taken steps to bring to trial hundreds of alleged swindlers who have stolen an estimated total of $150,000,000 from the American people through fraudulent use of the United States mails. On March 1, at Kansas City, Mo., a successful prosecution and conviction was secured of the head of the huge Stewart Land Co. postal-fraud case, and the trials of six others jointly indicted with him are being pushed to a speedy termination.

The Attorney General early in this administration took steps to investigate the Chemical Foundation, which it is alleged was organized by former public officials to take over for their own benefit valuable patents.

Disappointment in recoveries from war-time transactions is inevitable, because the defense stands upon the contract made by the Government through the War Department during the war; and unless fraud can be established, recoveries are impossible.

These results have been secured at a time when law enforcement is on trial, and they challenge the record for a better showing for law and order enforcement than that of the Harding administration under the immediate and personal direction of Attorney General Harry M. Daugherty.

THE PROBLEM OF AGRICULTURE.

The administration in March, 1921, found awaiting it economic problems infinitely complex and difficult. Agricultural depression was particularly severe. Farmers had been especially hard hit, which sorely affected commerce and industry. It was realized as never before how intimately are connected national prosperity and agricultural prosperity.

During the war and for years preceding it prices of farm products were high, but not as high relatively as many other commodities. Farm production was stimulated by these prices for some time after peace came and while we were engaged in dismantling the war machinery. War contracts and war expenditures continued, as did war prices, until 1920, when rather suddenly came the perpendicular drop in the prices of most farm products, which within a short time reached lower levels with relation to the prices of other things than ever before in the history of the country.

The administration, both through the Department of Agriculture and Congress, early in the year addressed itself to the situation and took such steps to reorganize the department and enact legislation as would tide over the period of depression and, if possible, place agriculture upon a substantial foundation.

REORGANIZATION OF THE ACTIVITIES OF THE DEPARTMENT.

Particular attention has been given to the economic phases of the department's activities. Certain fundamental changes in the reorganization of the regular activities was of first importance.

BUREAU OF AGRICULTURAL ECONOMICS.

Chief among these was the reorganization of the economic work of the department by consolidating in a single bureau all work in the economics of agricutural production and marketing, known as the Bureau of Agricultural Economics, a combination of the Bureau of Markets and Crop Estimates and the Office of Farm Management and Farm Economics. This change places in one bureau 1,800 workers, of whom 1,100 are here in Washington, the others in the field, who follow farmers' problems of production and marketing from the choice of what to produce on the farm to the disposal of the product to the consumer, giving attention to foreign demand looking to increased consumption of farm products in foreign countries.

The work of this bureau is divided into three divisions: (1) Production, (2) marketing, and (3) general production and distribution statistics, and the other related questions of finance and cooperative organization. The latter includes divisions dealing with land problems and production involved in changes in rural population and standards of living.

NEW LIVE-STOCK REPORTING SERVICE.

The crop-reporting work, including live stock, has extended to a nation-wide live-stock reporting service, showing the monthly changes in the live-stock situation on farms, and will include forecasting and reporting of important live-stock movements. These reports also include births, deaths, losses, marketings, purchases, animals bred, and the number of animals on farms, obtained from 70,000 to 100,000 farms. A recent example of the stabilizing effect upon the live-stock and meat industry by correlating supply and demand of this live-stock reporting service was the forecast showing that approximately 103,000 head of Arizona cattle would be available for market. To aid in this activity the Market News Service of the department, in which facts concerning movements, prices, and stocks of farm products on the market are gathered and distributed, will be greatly expanded during the next year as a result of the increased appropriation from $405,000 to $700,000.

REORGANIZATION OF EXTENSION WORK.

Congress provided for a director of extension work, placing under one person the responsibility of coordinating all of the extension work of the department, having to do entirely with extension work, such as the office of cooperative extension work in the States Relations Service, the office of motion pictures in the Division of Publications, and the office of exhibits, a plan which makes unnecessary the States Relations Service, the office of the director of information, and the Division of Publications, all of which will be eliminated as such.

The other offices in these divisions will be placed under the supervision of the director of scientific work, the director of regulatory work, or within the Secretary's office proper. When this complete plan of supervision is put into operation the three general classifications of the department's work—research, regulatory, and extension—will come under a single directing head, each responsible to the Secretary.

BUREAU OF HOME ECONOMICS.

Of particular interest to the women of the country is the announcement of a new bureau of home economics, already provided for by Congress, which will rank in importance with the other bureaus in the department and be in charge of a woman to better deal with the problems facing the women on farms and in the cities.

FORMATION OF COMMODITY COUNCILS.

Another advanced step in the interest of agriculture is the establishment of commodity councils, composed of representatives of the various bureaus, to make studies of the conditions which influence the production of various crops in sections of the country.

As an example may be cited the cotton council, whose meetings are attended by the people who understand the soils of the Cotton Belt, varieties as adapted to certain soils, by the experts in cultural methods, the entomologists who understand injurious insects and the methods of combating them, specialists who understand grading and marketing methods, and by many others who have information needed to bring about the most economical production and marketing of cotton. From such studies there should come certain definite department policies with regard to the cotton crop. The same general policy is being followed with regard to the other agricultural crops.

These are some but not all of the important steps taken by the department to advance the interests of agriculture.

CONGRESSIONAL PROGRAM OF AGRICULTURAL REHABILITATION.

Now let us examine the accomplishments of Congress in aid of this, the country's first and greatest industry. One of the first steps it took was to appoint a Joint Commission on Agricultural Inquiry, consisting of Members of the House and Senate, which sat during most of the year 1921. It called to its aid various Government departments. It heard practical farmers and representatives of farm organizations, business men engaged in industry closely allied to agriculture, economists, experts in finance and in transportation. From this data assembled the commission made its report in four parts, dealing with the causes of the agricultural crisis, farm credits, transportation and distribution, and marketing. No such systematic study of the economics of agriculture and no such body of information had ever before been attempted. No one will question that this commission did a tremendously valuable piece of work, out of which already has come valuable assistance in laying out a wise national agricultural policy, which has eventuated in a great relief program of legislation.

THE NATIONAL AGRICULTURAL CONFERENCE.

Another important aid to agriculture during this administration was the national agricultural conference held at Washington in January, 1922, called by the Secretary of Agriculture at the request of the President, and which proved to be the most representative gathering of practical farmers and representatives of farm organizations and allied industries ever brought together. Congress responded to the recommendations of this conference by enacting most of them into law.

AGRICULTURAL CREDITS ACT OF 1923.

One of the most important actions of the Sixty-seventh Congress was the passage of the agricultural credits act at the close of the session. This act is designed to give the farmer the sort of credits he needs to produce efficiently and market in an ordinary way the products of the farm, a need which has been felt for at least 50 years. It provides a system of intermediate credit adapted to farm conditions and farm needs, and should bring about a reduction of the interest which farmers must pay for money borrowed.

The act is divided into two parts. The first provides Government agencies for handling agricultural loans and the second authorizes the organization of private agencies under Government supervision for making loans on live-stock securities and on farm commodities on the way to market.

The Government loan activities ay be carried on in connection with the Federal land banks, 12 in number, one in each land bank district, which makes land-mortgage loans, and the 12 banks being directed by a central Federal farm-loan bank in Washington. In connection with each of these land banks there is to be established an intermediate credit bank located in the same city with the land bank and under the supervision of the officers and directors of the land bank.

The Federal Government supplies each of these intermediate credit banks with a capital of not to exceed $5,000,000. These intermediate credit banks are authorized to discount farmers' notes which have been taken by the banks and other financial institutions and then carry such notes for a term of from six months to three years. The banks may also loan direct to farmers' cooperative associations under conditions set forth in the act.

The second division of the act authorizes the organization, under a Federal charter, of national agricultural credit corporations, these to be organized by private capital. They will be under the supervision of the Comptroller of the Currency, just as are other national banking institutions. They must have a capital stock of at least $250,000. They may issue collateral trust debentures up to 10 times their capital and surplus. Such corporations will most likely be organized in the Western States, where the live-stock industry is important and where at the present time cattle loan companies are in operation.

In addition to the provisions of the act designed to furnish the farmer much needed intermediate credit, certain changes have been made in the law under which the Federal land banks operate and in the Federal reserve act. Provision for the establishment of the so-called permanent organization of the 12 Federal land banks is made by providing that three out of the seven directors for each bank are to be elected by the borrowers from the bank and three are to be appointed by the Federal Farm Loan Bureau. The seventh director, who will be the president of the board, will be chosen from three persons who have received the highest nomination vote for this position by the borrowers or stockholders of the bank.

Heretofore the maximum amount which might be loaned to any individual by the Federal land banks has been $10,000. This has been increased to $25,000. Also the purpose for which mortgage loans may be made has been broadened to include the repayment of any existing indebtedness.

The Federal reserve act is amended by broadening the definition of what is called agricultural paper, making it include the grading and processing of agricultural products by cooperative marketing associations. Heretofore the Federal reserve banks have not been permitted to discount agricultural paper for a longer period than six months. This period has been increased to nine months.

An amendment to the Federal reserve act designed to encourage small banks to join the system is carried in this act, so that a bank which has capital equal only to 60 per cent of the capital required of national banks may now be admitted into the Federal reserve system if within a reasonable time the capital will be increased to correspond with the capital required of national banks. For the first time credit facilities are provided for the farmer as heretofore the Federal reserve act provided them to commercial enterprises.

Earlier in the Congress two separate amendments to the farm loan act had been made to relieve the agricultural situation. The first increased the income on the farm-loan bonds from 5 to 5½ per cent, so as to insure a market by which a fund could be realized out of which loans could be made to farmers, with a limitation of interest not above 6 per cent. The other amendment was permission to increase the fund from which loans could be made by $25,000,000. These two changes relieved the situation, which is now further relieved by the credits act passed at the close of the session.

AMENDMENT TO FEDERAL RESERVE ACT.

Still another step was taken to relieve the credit situation of the farmer. The law which created the Federal Reserve Board provided that in appointing members of that board the President should have due regard "to a fair representation of the different commercial, industrial, and geographical divisions of the country." Agriculture as well as commerce and industry demands consideration by the Federal Reserve Board in determining great financial policies. Accordingly Congress amended the Federal reserve act to include agriculture, so that it now reads that in appointing members the President should have due regard "to a fair representation of the financial, agricultural, industrial, and commercial interests."

Opposition to this amendment developed among those who felt that the provisions for agricultural representation had the appearance of class representation. The administration acted upon the theory that the Federal Reserve Board, the most powerful financial institution in the country, should administer its credit machinery not alone for business and industry but also for agriculture, the basic industry of the country, the industry upon which our entire civilization depends and which should have more careful consideration than it has had in the past. The law as amended and as it now stands provides for a board which shall represent, in fact, a cross section of our financial, agricultural, commercial, and industrial life.

REVIVAL OF WAR FINANCE CORPORATION.

One of the early acts of Congress to relieve the financial stringency of the farmers was the revival of the War Finance Corporation and a provision to extend the benefits of the corporation to agriculture, making the Secretary of Agriculture director of the corporation. The corporation was empowered to loan money to those engaged in marketing agricultural products for export or to banks or cooperative associations of producers which may have made advances for agricultural purposes, a relief thought by many to have been the salvation of the live-stock industry in the West and the saving from bankruptcy of industries essential to the prosperity of the entire country.

THE COOPERATIVE MARKETING ACT.

A need long felt by the cooperative marketing organizations was provided in a law approved February 18, 1922, giving the right to farmers to form associations for marketing, preparing and marketing, their products. This act gave to farmers many of the powers and privileges enjoyed by business corporations. The Secretary of Agriculture is given authority over the associations to prevent monopoly or restraint of trade in interstate or foreign commerce. The claim for this legislation is that through cooperative organizations of this kind it is thought possible to eliminate unnecessary middlemen, to improve agricultural conditions, and, while assuring the producer of a fair price for his products, protecting the consumers against extremely high prices.

EMERGENCY AND PERMANENT TARIFF.

One of the early acts of the Sixty-seventh Congress was the emergency tariff covering all the basic items of production of the farm. This was to operate until a permanent tariff measure protecting American industries could be enacted. The delay of this measure induced Congress to remove the time limit on the emergency act and make it permanent law, which was done in February, 1922. This decision was due to the importation of large quantities of products which had piled up in other countries and which our people could purchase at almost any price. These importations had a baleful effect upon the prices of our own products and further added to our surplus, hence the necessity of the protection which was readily provided by law.

PACKERS AND STOCKYARDS ACT.

A regulatory measure was passed known as the packers and stockyards act, to eliminate illegal and deceptive practices, to maintain open competitive market conditions, to enhance quality of service, and to regulate charges for marketing live stock reasonably; in short, to prevent and correct irregularities and abuses, such as unfair discriminatory practices, the control of prices, and unjust rates or charges. The operation of the act has been delayed by the courts; nevertheless, it has contributed directly and effectively to the good of the live-stock industry by bringing about friendly and better contacts between the packers, producers, and stockyards companies. It was under the authority of this law that the Secretary of Agriculture recently issued a complaint against the proposed merger of the Armour and Morris packing companies.

GRAIN FUTURES ACT.

Another law similar to that of the packers and stockyards act is the grain futures act, which brings the various grain exchanges under the supervision of the Secretary of Agriculture. This law gives the supervising agency authority to inquire into the manner in which grain is bought and sold and future contracts made upon the principal grain exchanges of the country. It does not prevent hedging or legitimate trading, but it requires or carries the power to prevent unfair manipulation and promotes impartial practices by those who deal in grain futures. The law as first passed was pronounced unconstitutional. It was redrafted and again passed by Congress and is again on a second appeal before the Supreme Court to test its constitutionality.

AMENDMENT TO WAREHOUSE ACT.

The United States warehouse act of 1916 provided a permissive system of licensing warehousemen by the Secretary of Agriculture. It applied to four of the principal staple crops—cotton, wool, tobacco, and grain. Its primary purpose is to encourage the orderly marketing of agricultural products by providing for a form of warehouse receipt to be issued while the products are in storage. On February 1, 1923, there were 360 cotton warehouses licensed, 227 grain warehouses, 20 wool warehouses, and 62 tobacco warehouses. The capacities of many of these warehouses were quite large, the licensed capacity for cotton being sufficient to store at one time about one-fourth of a normal cotton crop and for wool about one-sixth of the annual clip. The progress made under this act in the last two years and the acceptability to bankers of receipts issued under it created a demand on the part of producers of other products for enlarging the scope of the act.

On February 23, 1923, the law was amended by removing the limitation on the products which might be stored so that the Secretary of Agriculture may license a warehouse for the storage of any products which he considers would constitute sound collateral. It also provides for a system of licensing inspectors and samplers of commodities stored in warehouses, in addition to graders and weighers. The amendments made to the penalty section of the law very materially strengthen the law in the eyes of bankers.

That receipts issued under the warehouse act constitute collateral for credit purposes is evident from the fact that the War Finance Corporation in the past season agreed to make loans to various cotton associations aggregating more than $59,700,000 on the basis of such receipts, or such other receipts of which it might approve; and further agreed to loan to one of the tobacco growers' associations $30,000,000 with similar receipts as collateral. Some of the cotton associations stored their cotton exclusively in federally licensed warehouses so that they might get the benefit of the Federal warehouse act, and the two largest tobacco associations have followed the same procedure.

The agricultural credits act and the Federal warehouse act go hand in hand. The receipts issued under the latter act will constitute collateral for use under the former act, so that associations will experience little difficulty in securing loans either from private bankers or under the agricultural credits act if federally licensed warehouse receipts are offered as collateral.

COTTON STANDARDS ACT.

The cotton standards act, which becomes effective August 1, 1923, prohibits the use of foreign grade and staple standards for cotton, and establishes the official standards of the United States as the sole standards in interstate and foreign commerce. It also enables the Secretary of Agriculture to interpret the official standards by determining the classification of cotton submitted for the purpose and by the arbitration of disputes as to classification arising out of commercial cotton transactions.

The operation of the act is expected to eliminate much of the confusion as to grades and values that has resulted in the past from the use of foreign standards in the United States. With the American cotton business on uniform standards, cotton growers should be able to realize in the future much larger benefits from the classification of their cotton than has been possible heretofore.

STANDARD FOR BUTTER.

The bill establishing a legislative standard for butter, which was passed by the last Congress, is of peculiar interest to the dairy industry in this country. For many years the industry has been compelled to contend with conditions arising as the result of the differences between the existing standards for butter. The Department of Agriculture for the purpose of enforcing the Federal food and drugs act announced a standard for butter calling for a milk-fat content of 82.5 per cent. But confusion of standards throughout the States made it impossible for the Department of Agriculture to enforce its standard above 80 per cent, justified by trade practice.

Upon the recommendation of the Department of Agriculture and with the indorsement of the trade the legislative standard of 80 per cent has now been enacted by the Congress, thus furnishing a common standard for all interstate traffic in butter, eliminating the confusion heretofore existing, and placing all dairy interests manufacturing butter upon an equal competitive basis.

NAVAL STORES ACT.

The naval stores act, passed in the last Congress, is designed to stop the adulteration of turpentine and the misgrading of rosin, and also to establish definite standards for rosin and turpentine. This legislation has been sought for 15 years by the industry itself, and its need had been definitely shown by the work of the Department of Agriculture during that period, which has found that from 20 to 25 per cent of the turpentine sold in this country is adulterated, and that a large percentage of rosin is seriously misgraded.

The act, which will be of undoubted benefit to the industry and consumer, places at their service the facilities and experiences of the department as a final authority on the purity of turpentine and the grading of rosin.

THE FILLED MILK ACT.

Another important act, widely demanded by agriculturists, was the filled milk law.

THE GOOD ROADS ACT.

The good roads act, which provided $140,000,000 available for better roads throughout the Nation, is a distinctive aid to agriculture.

Here is what is pronounced the most ambitious program of legislation in relief of agriculture ever written by any legislative body at any time in any country.

The future of this important industry has more promise to-day than heretofore; and while it is still suffering from abrupt deflation and war influence, it will gradually assume its proper rank among productive industries. Measured by obstacles faced, relief provided, and results achieved, this administration has done more for the country's basic industry of agriculture than has ever been attempted before, and it appeals to the record and invites the sharpest scrutiny of its critics upon the accomplishments.

THE WORK OF THE DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE.

The Department of Commerce has also taken advanced grounds to keep pace with the tremendous possibilities of our productivity.

It was provided with total appropriations amounting to $24,320,192 for the fiscal year ending July 1, 1922. The actual expenditure of the department for the fiscal year was $21,024,870.17, a total saving of $3,295,321.83, or 13.5 per cent of the available appropriation.

EXTENSION OF FOREIGN TRADE.

Despite this economy in administration, the Bureaus of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, Census, Fisheries, and Navigation were completely reorganized.

The Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce was enlarged to include divisions covering foodstuffs, cotton, agricultural implements, automotive products, coal, electrical equipment, hides and leather, industrial machinery, iron and steel, paper, petroleum, lumber, rubber, shoes and leather manufactures, specialties, transportation and communication, foreign tariffs, and foreign commercial law. Permanent committees from the trades were created for cooperation with the department.

An entire revision has been made of the character of information sought from foreign countries by the broadening of its economic character, and in rendering more specific its values to different industries. Systematic and regular information has developed on foreign situations which have direct reflection upon our domestic commerce—for instance, surveys of world stocks and consumption of cotton, wool, wheat, rice, and some other commodities, together with the currents in manufactured goods between other countries than our own in their relation to American markets. Weekly reports are carried by over 200 daily newspapers and periodicals, reaching a circulation in excess of 10,000,000 people weekly.

AID EXTENDED TO INDUSTRY.

From April to July, 1921, the Department of Commerce undertook the initial investigation into the credit and commodity situation in agricultural produce at home and abroad and joined with other departments in conferences that were called affecting the cotton, cattle, and grain industries. The reconstitution of the War Finance Corporation was recommended, and the impending widespread bankruptcy in the agricultural industry was thus prevented. Particular service was performed for the sugar trade in November, 1921, when prices were below the cost of production. Through extended conferences held by the department cooperation was secured by the manufacturers, bankers, merchants, and producers, credits were reestablished, liquidation was stopped, and through returning confidence accumulation of normal stocks was resumed by the distribution trades, and the beet-sugar situation was tided over.

STEPS FOR RELIEF OF UNEMPLOYMENT.

The problem presented by the extension of unemployment to between 4,000,000 and 5,000,000 in the United States as a result of the industrial slump in 1921 was met by the Department of Commerce, in cooperation with the Department of Labor, by calling a conference on unemployment on September 26, 1921. The Department of Commerce created an organization for the consummation of the plans of this conference for ameliorating the unemployment situation. Emergency committees were created in cooperation with over 200 municipalities, with the cooperation of the employees by vast extension of divided-time employment, and through the combined effort of the Federal administration in expediting and of Congress in extending public works, the most severe winter of unemployment in our history was passed without any notable suffering and without a single public disturbance.

INVESTIGATIONS IN BUILDING AND HOUSING.

A Division of Building and Housing was created in the department to deal with the problem created by the shortage of some million dwellings resulting from suspended construction during the war. As a result of the activity of this division voluntary bureaus have been created in many municipalities for advancement of home ownership, and where advice on finance and aid by furnishing designs and specifications could be obtained at a nominal charge. Systematic measures of cooperation were set in motion in trade and civic bodies for the eliminating of waste in various directions, and thus a reduction of construction costs. A committee from representatives of the important professional and civic associations in cooperation with this division and the Bureau of Standards formulated a standard building code to meet the problem created by the varying regulations in force in hundreds of different municipalities founded within scientific study and imposing an unnecessary cost upon building of from 10 to 20 per cent. This code which has but recently been issued has had wide circulation and is already being adopted in some municipalities. This division has also, in cooperation with the trades, been working for the elimination of unnecessary variation of dimensions of building material and in the simplification of specifications.

VOLUME OF WORK OF THE SIXTY-SEVENTH CONGRESS.

The Sixty-seventh Congress was in session 414 actual days. It enacted 655 public and 276 private laws, or a total of 931, an average of more than two laws for each day it sat.

The index of the laws, giving a brief statement of each, when and by whom introduced, when reported, and when debated, amended, and finally passed, comprises 204 pages of the House Calendar.

These laws cover the widest range of interests, touching all the basic elements of production, distribution, and consumption, including almost every occupation of our citizenry. An index of leading topics dealt with would include, among others, agriculture, farms and farming, appropriations covering every department, involving the expenditure for next year of nearly $4,000,000,000, the Army and Navy, aviation, banks and banking, bonds, Budget, claims, coal, commerce and labor, immigration and deportation, mines and mining, radio, reclamation, waterpower development, and so forth.

SOME OUTSTANDING TASKS.

The first step was taken to get away from war-time taxation by a revision of the system at an annual saving of $800,000,000. The final step was taken to abandon the pork-barrel method of legislation by the adoption of a National Budget System at an annual saving of hundreds of millions of dollars. General Dawes places the saving the first year at $1,600,000,000.

The paralyzing "revenue only" Underwood bill was displaced by an American protection law, under which industry revived, unemployment disappeared, and revenue increased at least 33⅓ per cent over that of 1920, the last year of the Underwood law, if the present rate continues.

The increasing inflow of Europe's population, with its un-American dogmas and complicated unemployment problems, was met by a further limitation of immigration to insure a better selection of immigrants.

The confusion arising out of a war that totally suspended fundamental laws of economics, with their inevitable injury to labor, led to placing on the statute books laws specifically commended by the highest labor authority in the land and indorsed as especially in the interest of the workers of the country.

The stupendous problem of caring for the disabled soldier of the World War called for concentration of effort; hence the creation of the Veterans' Bureau, whose expenditure last year was $510,000,000.

Widows' pension act passed, and an act amending the civil service retirement act; also, the reclassification act was passed.

Remedial action on behalf of postal clerks was secured in the Postal Service employees' compensation act.

Relief of the courts was provided by the creation of 23 additional Federal judges and a separate act defining a method for settling claims against the United States.

Two specific laws were enacted to survey the facts pertaining to the coal-mining industry as a basis for adjusting disputes arising in that basic industry—the coal distribution act and the coal fact finding act.

This administration found a foreign debt of over $10,000,000,000 loaned by us, with nothing to show for it but due bills, I O U's, uncollectible. A funding commission was created by this administration. It has succeeded in a settlement with the British Government, which agrees to issue her bonds to amount of $4,600,000,000, which when fully paid will amount, principal and interest, to $10,105,000,000, the largest transaction in the history of the world and the most important step to insure economic recovery in the world yet taken. The commission will seek settlements with other debtor countries and put an end to the vicious twaddle about our canceling these solemn obligations due our people.

Congress passed an act supplementing and defining national prohibition and provided funds for its effective enforcement. The Justice Department rendered a decision against ships of foreign registry bringing liquor into American ports, though under seal, and also against ships of American registry having liquor in cargo or stores either within or without the 3-mile limit of American territorial waters.

This Congress established peace with our former enemy countries, set up the Mixed Claims Commission to adjust claims between the two Governments, and as one of the last acts of the session it authorized the return of alien property where the claims did not exceed $10,000, which settles at least 93 per cent of the claims of German citizens held against the Alien Property Custodian.

IN THE WAKE OF WAR.

The story of the world's spree, of the waste and extravagance of war-time prosperity, followed by the sickening season of the aftermath, is read in the crash of business enterprise, in the overturn of industry, the dislocation of all production, by the disastrous deflation from the dangerous inflation of war stress, disappearance of capital from the channels of trade, the prohibitive rates of interest on money, the derangement of banking facilities, the starvation and paralysis of general business, the threatened bankruptcy of a too rapid liquidation of agriculture, the enforced idleness of millions of workers, and the low ebb of Government credit.

AS IT AFFECTED OUR FINANCES.

The story could also be read in a debt which overnight leaped from less than a billion to twenty-six billion, a debt so huge that the annual interest charge alone was considerably greater than the total cost of running the Government prior to the war.

It was read in the annual outlay of $27,000,000,000 in 1918, $19,000,000,000 in 1919, and $7,500,000,000 in 1920.

AS IT AFFECTED FOREIGN RELATIONS.

The story was read in our disturbed foreign relations, more or less strained with much of the world. The story repeats itself in the ominous problems so comprehensive and so complicated as to involve every department of the Government, and taxed the best talent of the land for the proper solution.

THE PROBLEMS FACING INDUSTRY.

These conditions demanded readjustment when President Harding assumed the duties of leadership. Two years have passed. It has been a time of keen concern to all good citizens. It has been marked by sincere efforts to ameliorate suffering incident to the ravages of war.

THE RECORD.

The two years have been crowded with a great volume of constructive and remedial work. The record is now made up; the results are apparent upon which the people must give their verdict of approval or disapproval.

March 4, 1923, witnesses a picture in sharp contrast to that of March 4, 1921. Business enterprise is on the top wave, industry completely revived, production on a sound basis again, capital out from its hiding place to seek investment, rates of interest lower, money easier, agriculture approaching normal, unemployment disappeared, employers advertising for labor, and the Government credit at the high point.

All the basic industries are again at normal production, and in some industries, such as steel, contracts for future deliveries are taxing the capacities of the mills.

Construction and building are at a stage beyond anything in modern times, with wages the highest of record.

AN IMPORTANT SURVEY.

A recent survey of business conditions, as determined by the items of demand, price, supply of finished stocks, labor conditions, and collections, of 41 different articles of trade showed a most healthful situation. The demand was fair or good in almost all of the items, price was firm or higher in all but three, stocks were normal, moderate, light, or decreasing in all, supply of labor was scarce in 16 and sufficient in only 10 items, wages were unchanged in 24 and advanced in the other items, and collections were good in 14, fair to good in the same number, and poor in only 3 items.

EVIDENCES OF INDUSTRY REVIVED.

Transportation efficiency has returned and the traffic has reached capacity again. Receipts are almost double a year ago, and car loading has outstripped anything in the past.

A second barometer of business conditions is the Postal Service. A report of a recent survey of 50 towns, comprising 54 per cent of the country's postal business, shows an average increase over a corresponding period a year ago of 12.81 per cent. The increase per month for the eight months ending February was as follows: July, 11.62 per cent; August, 10.80 per cent; September, 11.56 per cent; October, 14.34 per cent; November, 13.79 per cent; December, 9.05 per cent; January, 18.99 per cent; and February, 13.18 per cent, making a total increase for the eight months of 103.33, or an average of 12.81 per cent per month.

The automotive activity is another barometer, which shows the United States making 84 per cent of the world's output of this industry, which was never more active than to-day. The same can be said about all of our basic industries.

HOW IT WAS DONE.

Economy being the watchword, the war dismantling process is about ended, the pay roll decreased by dropping over 100,000 employees; the annual expenditure, which in 1920 was $7,500,000,000, reduced to $3,706,000,000; the public debt decreased to $23,077,000,000 last October, a reduction of nearly $3,000,000,000; the taxation burden reduced annually by over $800,000,000; the deficit of over $600,000,000 wiped out; the Budget balanced, and our fiscal system the soundest in history; the displacement of a business-destroying revenue system by the American system of protection, and the consequent return of an era of prosperity, now in full sway.

AFTER THE STORM CLOUDS.

The overhanging clouds which darkened our international horizon have disappeared. Diplomatic and cordial relations now exist with all of the nations of the earth save only Mexico and Russia, both of which will be adjusted when our terms are accepted. Out of the recent world convulsion, with its complicated situations, its undeterminable conflicting national interests, its irreconcilable ambitions, and its acute involvements, we have emerged, our sovereignty unquestioned, our independence undisputed, our honor unsullied, our national integrity unassailed, where we to-day stand upon a vantage ground to do good never before reached by any nation in the history of the world.

TEAMWORK OF THE ADMINISTRATION.

These results are largely due to the teamwork of the administration not only in the executive departments but between the President and Congress. The character and ability of the President's advisers, the Cabinet, will not suffer in comparison with what has gone before.

The President's sincere regard and strict adherence to our constitutional system of coordinate departments of lawmaking, law interpreting, and law enforcing opened the way for a character of teamwork never before excelled. Pledges of platform were respected and problems of adjustment were met and solved by the closest cooperation of President and Congress. True, such problems as the shipping bill failed of becoming law, but the Sixty-seventh Congress ended after having written the most stupendous volume of legislation ever written into law.

THE VERDICT.

To-day President Harding, standing at the half-way post of his administration, presents these results of his efforts to solve the intricate problems of the war's aftermath.

The people will judge him and his work by these results. Whatever may be the verdict, the achievements challenge the record to present another two years of accomplishments which will approach what has been done from March 4, 1921, to March 4, 1923.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, an article appeared in the American Farm Bureau Federation News Letter of January 11, 1923, which was reprinted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of March 4, 1923, purporting to show the financial effect of the present tariff upon consumers in general and the farmer in particular, and attempting to show that as a result thereof the farmers as a whole are sustaining a great loss.

I have examined this article with care, and I find that its computations and conclusions are based upon two propositions; first, that except as to articles of which we produce a surplus the tariff is always added to the cost of the article upon which it is laid, and the price to the consumer is thereby increased by substantially the amount of the tariff, and, second, that the only persons receiving any benefit from the tariff are those directly engaged in or connected with the production of the articles upon which the duty is laid.

Following these theories, it is estimated in the article that the total cost of the tariff to the whole country is $1,715,000,000 and the cost to the farmers $426,000,000, with $125,000,000 gain, leaving the net cost to agriculture $301,000,000.

It is obvious that if these theories are correct a protective tariff is an economic fallacy; that there should be no tariff on farm products or anything else except for revenue purposes; that even a tariff for revenue ought not to be levied upon articles that are produced in this country and come into competition with the imported article, for if it was so levied the cost to the consumer would be the amount of the tariff added not only to the price of the articles imported but the same amount added to all other like articles produced and consumed in this country. It will be seen that the News Letter referred to presents in disguised form the arguments in favor of a tariff for revenue only as opposed to a protective tariff, and revives a political issue which has been prominent before the people in every presidential election for many years.

It is true that this country has never been on a free-trade basis and never been completely on a tariff-for-revenue basis; but a tariff for revenue only, with what is called "incidental protection," has several times been tried in the history of this country. The mere halfway adoption of these theories has always had such disastrous results to the Nation as a whole and the American farmer in particular that the policy was reversed as soon as the administration of the national affairs could be changed.

It is not possible to discuss in a statement of reasonable length all the fallacies that are embodied in the article which is being considered, but its failure to show the real situation arises in a large part from the fact that it does not take into consideration the incidental benefits resulting to the farmer from the tariff, and its assumption that the amount of the tariff is always added to the cost to the consumer when it often actually decreases the price to him. Without reviewing the article as a whole, two illustrations may be given which show how erroneous are the methods of its calculations and how completely unfounded are its conclusions.

The question is often asked, "Who pays the tariff?" The Canadian farmer does not need a theorist to tell him. He knows that he pays the tariff on cattle which he exports into the United States, and he has protested very vigorously against it.

The accuracy of the figures given out in the article referred to may be well judged from those used with reference to cattle. Only a little over 200,000 head of cattle of all kinds, including calves, stockers, and feeders, were imported in 1922, practically all from Canada and Mexico, at a value of about $4,700,000. The number of feeding cattle imported was so small as compared to the number estimated to be slaughtered during the same year in the United States, which was over 13,000,000 cattle and nearly 9,000,000 calves, that anyone who has had experience in the cattle business would doubt whether it would make any difference in the price in this country if none had been imported or if double the number had been brought in. Yet it is estimated in the article that the cost of those purchasing feeders at the St. Paul market alone was $1,000,000 on account of the tariff. Nor does it seem to have even entered into the minds of those who prepared the article that if those buying the feeders passed on to the consumer the addition to the prices which is claimed to have resulted the cost to those buying the feeders was nothing. On the other hand, if it was not passed on to the consumer, just how it is figured that the consumer is out anything is difficult to explain.

How far those who study theories more than they do markets may get into error is well shown by the statements in the article with reference to sugar. Here, again, the Cuban planter can answer the question of who pays the tariff. He says that he pays the most of it, and he also is vigorously protesting against it. The increase in the tariff on sugar made by the tariff bill that went into effect last September was trifling, being only about one-sixth of a cent a pound on sugar from Cuba, from which country we now get all our imported sugar. The emergency tariff of May, 1921, made a much larger increase, but, notwithstanding the increase, sugar continued to go down in price for the next nine months. Recently a report from the Department of Commerce that the world's production of sugar for last year was 200,000 tons less than the consumption demand sent the price of sugar up 2¾ cents a pound, although to this statement was added the further data that there was a large carry-over of sugar from the former year which would much more than make up this deficiency. There is produced in the United States from 800,000 to 1,000,000 tons of beet sugar annually and a large amount of cane sugar.

Everyone will admit that if the tariff was taken off sugar could not be produced within the United States proper in competition with that from Cuba, and the American producers would have to go out of business. If a shortage of 200,000 tons in the world's production, even with a carry-over of more than enough to make up that shortage, increases the price of sugar 2¾ cents a pound, what would happen if the supply of sugar for the world was over 1,000,000 tons short and that shortage was in the United States, as it would have been if we had no tariff on sugar? It needs no theory to tell us what would happen. The consumption of sugar in the United States is about 5,700,000 tons. There was no real shortage in 1920, but the Cuban planters claimed there was, got together, and put the price up to 24 cents. With a real shortage and no competition in the United States, they could do this again with even greater success than before. The Cuban producers need this market and will take all of it they can profitably at a competitive price made by the American sugar producers, but if there is no competition on the part of the American sugar producers they would take it all at a price made by themselves, and without the tariff they could easily drive the American producers entirely out of the field. The real fact is that the tariff has lessened the price of sugar to the American consumer, instead of having increased it.

What the American farmer needs is a market, and by far the greatest and best market for him is the 110,000,000 people living in the United States. A great portion of this market was lost in 1921 because 4,500,000 American citizens were out of employment a large portion of that year. Consequently farm products declined all through 1921. In 1922 these men were gradually put back to work, until at the end of the year there was practically no unemployment, and prices of farm products, on an average, steadily rose and continued to rise into 1923. Take off the tariff and this unemployment would again manifest itself, with a consequent loss of a market for farm products, as well as other commodities, and a depression in prices.

The value of the American market to the American farmer is strikingly shown by the fact that, although the value of exports of farm products fell off in 1922 as compared to those of 1921 over $225,000,000, the value of farm products in the United States, according to the weekly statement in Weather, Crops, and Markets, issued by the Department of Agriculture, increased over that of 1921 by the immense sum of $2,000,000,000. The conclusion is inevitable that the change in conditions on the American market was what brought this great gain to the farmer.

Prices of farm products at this time are, in general, higher than they were in 1913, some of them very much higher. At the same time the prices of other commodities still remain at a figure which is a greater advance from 1913 prices than is shown by farm products, and as a result the condition of the farmer is far from satisfactory. There has been a general advance in the price of commodities lately, but the tariff has had little to do with that advance. The purpose of the tariff is not so much to advance the prices of articles upon which it is laid as it is to retain the American market for the American farmer and manufacturer and to stabilize prices therein. By so doing the indirect benefits to the farmer, the manufacturer, and the consumer vastly outweigh even such imaginary losses as are claimed in the article reviewed.

In this connection it ought to be noted that some of the greatest advances in prices have been made in articles upon which there is no tariff. Building materials have increased in cost, especially lumber, but there is no tariff on lumber. Leather has increased in price, but there is no tariff on leather nor on the boots and shoes or work harness made from it. Agricultural implements are far higher in price over 1913, but there is no tariff on them. On the other hand, the farmer sells much more than he buys, and allowance should be made for this fact. On the whole, the conclusion must be that the American farmer, instead of losing by reason of there being a protective tariff, has greatly benefited thereby.

Whether some of the rates should be changed is another question. The Tariff Commission has authority under the so-called flexible tariff provisions of the present law to adjust the rates when found to be too high or too low.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, by the Constitution the President gives the Congress information on the state of the Union. The Constitutional Convention often went into Committee of the Whole on the state of the American Union. The United States are not spoken of as the "Union" anywhere else in the Constitution. Following the example of Parliament as to the King's speech, it was the custom of each House of Congress to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. No business was before it, debate was general not only in the sense that it was not limited in subject, but that everybody could speak that was recognized. After 1832 it was only for debate on the President's message. Before that date resolutions were offered covering general principles, and if after debate one of these resolutions was adopted it was reported to the House, who would refer it to a committee for the preparation of a bill. (Jefferson's Manual, sec. 12, and Hinds' Precedents.)

This debate in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had the advantage of developing free discussion, a real parliament or talking place, where different topics had reflective consideration and the general principles were thus settled before consideration was had of any special bill. It had the advantage also of allowing that free thought and discussion which now make the strength of the Senate, in spite of the delays which they cause in its proceedings.

A former Speaker of the House, Mr. Grow, was insistent that we ought to return to the old practice of going into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for general consideration and general debate on the President's message and the needs of the times with the understanding that no specific measure would be reported. On the other hand, he urged that when the House was in committee on any special measure the general debate should be confined to that measure. It is not too much to say, judging from our experience in conferences and under the five-minute rule, that valuable debate could be had in Committee of the Whole on the President's message and the state of the Union if the length of speeches were limited to 5 or 10 minutes except by unanimous consent. The present rules of the House result in muzzling some of its most valuable Members who are unwilling to go and ask for time, and the assignment of time is destructive of real debate, where Members answer one another, and was earnestly opposed by our dear friend, the late Member from New York, Mr. Cockran. It is a right thing that the House should from time to time go into consideration of the state of the Union—its needs, its dangers, its promises, and its hopes—without being bound down to any particular bill.

The present state of the Union suggests mingled feelings of hope and fear, joy and sorrow. Its progress has been not only without example but beyond the most ardent hopes of those great men, Washington and Hamilton, who saw the future greatness of that Union even in its small beginnings. Ours is the greatest nation in the world, whether it be judged by its productive power, by its wealth, or by its sound political common sense.

Our flag is the oldest in the world, and it is not too much to say that it floats over a people whose Government has changed less than any other in spite of all the fads and fancies that sometimes prevail.

IT IS REAL AND AMERICAN.

The Union is a real union. We are all Americans. As Washington said:

> The name of American, which belongs to you in your national capacity, must always exalt the just pride of patriotism, more than any appellation derived from local discriminations.

Experiences of the late war have scattered the fears of those who doubted whether those who had come to us from foreign countries were real Americans. The soldiers, the officers, even the generals, were often born abroad. In this House our leader in the war was the present chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, who was born in Baden. The medals of honor, the citations for distinguished service, the heroic attacks and defense, the wounds and deaths and graves give distinction to men whose names show that they came from every country in Europe. We had a scare at one time about sedition and spying, and some people still sympathize with that scare, but we may truly say that America needs no protection except the feelings of its own people. "Citizens by birth or by choice of a common country, that country has a right to concentrate our affections," as Washington said, and now it does concentrate our affections. We went into the war as a Nation. A free people submitted itself to universal conscription. They not only did so gladly but in any future war that may require like sacrifice we shall have universal conscription not only of soldiers but of workmen and capital and carry on that war as the war of the Nation.

ONE OF INDEPENDENT STATES AND LOCAL SELF-GOVERNMENT.

Our lamented friend from New York to whom I just referred used to insist that it would be well to divide our cities into small districts or wards for purely local matters and allow these wards to determine for themselves how they should be managed within themselves, leaving to the central city government only those matters which had to be managed as a whole, like water supply, through traffic, and so forth. This notion is perhaps not practical, but it is a really great question as to how the Government which was fit for a nation of farmers and fishermen can be made to work in a nation of mills, railroads, banks, and department stores.

The cost of Government in my own town used to be less than 2 per cent of a half valuation, or 1 per cent of the real selling value. Taxes have multiplied sixteenfold. The city spends it all. The difference is largely in the new things that are done by the cities—the costly buildings, from the city hall to the schoolhouse; the high-priced pavements laid from curb to curb, instead of for a roadway; the continual destruction of these pavements by the automobile truck; and the host of police, of inspectors, of physicians, and of experts of all kinds which attend the present city government. All these give advantages to each citizen of which his forefathers could not dream, but do take away from him the freedom and independence of which those forefathers were so proud.

All this, it may be said, is a matter for the State and not for the United States, who are asked to care for matters which are not for what the Articles of Confederation called the "mutual and general welfare" of the States and the Constitution called the "general welfare" but affect every individual in things which ought to be in charge of his own State and town.

WHICH MUST BE PRESERVED.

The Federal Government, in short, is taking charge of matters which belong under the Constitution to the various States, or even to the town. Various proposed measures would take charge of the schools and the hospitals. It is a real question of the present day how to maintain the life and vigor of our State and local governments.

It is the court, the county, and the town which teach men how to be freemen and how to respect the freedom of others. Crime must be indicted by county jurors and tried by a local jury. Everything will be better done if it is managed by those who see it. Our experiences in the Indian Territory have proved that there are no schools so hard to manage or to inspect as a local school which is controlled from Washington. Localities localize frictions. It is, perhaps, a pity that labor disputes were ever put into the United States courts, because local disputes governed by local conditions have thereby become matters of national concern. In this discussion of the state of the Union it may be fairly said that the Union has been asked and is being asked to carry more than it can fairly bear, and that every patriot should be active and brave in opposing any further invasion of the rights, duties, and powers of the several States over local concerns.

PROHIBITION AND A REASONABLE LAW.

The police powers of the State should not be taken over by the United States.

There is no subject to which this applies more than to prohibition. All good citizens have always believed in the strictest regulation of the liquor traffic, in enforcing temperance and punishing intemperance. Thomas Jefferson thought that the use of light beers and light wines is conducive to temperance, and the prohibition of light wines and beers is resented by intelligent and temperate people as an invasion of their freedom. Indeed, as the eighteenth amendment is now interpreted, it is a prohibition of temperance, for it forbids anyone to be temperate.

That amendment has come. While it remains it is the law and should be enforced, but no law can be enforced unless it is interpreted reasonably. It seems a most unreasonable interpretation of that law to enact that any liquid containing over one-half of 1 per cent of alcohol is intoxicating. The law must deal with the average man and not with the kind of man that would get intoxicated from seeing a bottle of whisky on a shelf across the room. My views on this subject have been known to all. I opposed county prohibition in 1886. I fought for the maintenance of the post exchange in the Army, where soldiers could get beer and light wines in reasonable quantities under proper regulation, and were not tempted to resort to dives outside, where they wasted their pay and spoiled their morals in drunken debauch. I opposed prohibition in the food bill during the war. I voted against the eighteenth amendment. I do not think that the Volstead Act was right or sensible in fixing one-half of 1 per cent as the limit for intoxicating liquor. In my opinion the amendment was not intended to abolish all the divisions between State and United States jurisdiction. The United States and the several States have concurrent power over every citizen, concurrent as to the person and place, but separate as to the subject of the jurisdiction.

Under this construction the States would have power to enforce the amendment so far as manufacture, sale, and use of liquors is concerned, and the United States would have concurrent power to enforce it so far as regards interstate and foreign commerce and the control of the territory of the United States, such as the District of Columbia or Alaska. Any other construction would give the State power over interstate commerce just as it would give the United States power over manufacture and sale. The Supreme Court seems to have held that the United States has such power over manufacture and sale, but there was no opinion. With careful reconsideration it seems quite possible that this view will be reconsidered and that it will be reestablished that there are boundaries of jurisdiction between the United States and State sovereignties, which have concurrent power over every person and place, divided only as to the subject matter of the power.

As Mr. Justice Bradley said in Claflin v. Houseman (93 U. S. 130, 136; 1876):

> Every citizen of a State is a subject of two distinct sovereignties, having concurrent jurisdiction in the State, concurrent as to place and persons, though distinct as to subject matter.

In any event the solid common sense of the people will in time bring a change in United States and State legislation by providing a reasonable per cent as the limit of intoxicating liquor. The people will demand a law that public sentiment will enforce.

INDUSTRIAL AND FINANCIAL.

It remains to consider the industrial and financial state of the Union. It takes time to get rid of the effects of a war. These effects are nothing new. After the Napoleonic wars wheat sold in England at 178 shillings a quarter, or over $5 a bushel, when money was worth much more then than it is now. Domestic service became so costly that early pictures in Punch show employers blacking their own boots and doing the most menial service. The United States still has to adjust prices and wages, and if these fall it is likely to be hard and make hard times.

It was eight years after the Civil War when we had the hard times of 1873. Let us hope that no such hard master may come. In any event, we glory in the belief that Americans will stand for honest money, as they did in 1877 when they were in the depths of that other panic, and that we shall maintain the credit and honor of our Government as that credit and honor has been kept since the Constitution was established and as they are now being kept. The industrial and financial state of the Union is in singular contrast to that of Europe.

THE CAPTAIN OF THE SHIP OF STATE.

The Union can only watch and wait. Thank God that we have followed Washington's advice and kept clear of entangling alliances! Thank Heaven that we have not attempted to support the finance of the world, where each nation must work out its own salvation with fear and trembling.

Our ship of state still swims. It is not selfishness to keep out of the fleet of wrecked vessels in which her sides might be broken and she might be sunk. It is not selfishness but world humanity which bids us look to our own chart and our own compasses and safety of our own vessel in order that we may help others that may be in need.

The ship has sailed on during the last two years under the wise guidance of its captain. This administration will be famous in our history. The Treasury has been put on a paying basis. The sick and wounded veteran has been bountifully provided for. Our industries have revived and will be protected by an adequate tariff, which can be adjusted by the President as the times may require. The farmer has been relieved by special legislation for his benefit. The world-wide naval competition has been limited by a conference called by our President and conducted with such courageous generosity that other nations could only say amen. China and Japan have been induced to make peace; South America asks us to arbitrate her differences. We have prosperity instead of depression; and for all this we thank the leadership and wisdom of Warren G. Harding.

Miss ROBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, this bill, S. 3855, which has so ruthlessly been denied a hearing on the floor of this House is one concerning which many of my colleagues will be called upon for explanations as to their individual part in such summary treatment. Telegrams, letters, publicity through newspapers and through club meetings have been ceaseless. I suggest that you fortify yourselves by obtaining copies of Senate Report No. 1175 which accompanies hearings on S. 3865 and S. 4223, bills relative to the Pueblo Indian lands, before a subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, a volume of 282 pages. Also obtain reports Nos. 1730 and 1748 to accompany the hearings on H. R. 1345 and S. 3855, these hearings being printed in a volume of 413 pages.

Except for a portion of one morning session I was present during the whole of these exhaustive and exhausting hearings before the House committee. They began with the presence of a full committee membership and with a crowded committee room in which there could not be seated all those who came.

Among those present were men and women interested in all phases of Indian welfare, as well as those especially concerned with legislation for the Pueblos.

From my personal and inherited experience as a member of the American family preeminent in its record of three generations through a century of Indian missionary service, it was no surprise to me that day by day zeal and ardor diminished on the part of these representatives until even the last timid little newspaper reporter disappeared.

The Pueblos are people who never sustained treaty relations with the United States, having come under our laws as did all other Mexican people. It is true that an Indian agent in 1850 had certain negotiations with the Pueblos which resulted in a tentative treaty which never was completed and was not held binding by the Pueblos themselves. I quote from pages 2 and 3 of the report:

Upon the acquisition by the United States from Mexico of the territory now comprising the State of New Mexico these Indians and their lands came under the jurisdiction of the United States, and in 1859 Congress confirmed the Spanish grants to the Indians, subject, however, to any valid adverse rights should any exist.

The status of these Indians as to whether or not they were wards of the Government was not definitely settled until 1913.

There was great difference of opinion as to their character and intelligence. In the case of United States v. Joseph (94 U. S. 614) the Supreme Court of the United States, speaking of these Indians, said:

"The character and history of these people are not obscure, but occupy a well-known page in the story of Mexico from the conquest of the country by Cortez to the cession of this part of it to the United States by the treaty of Guadaloupe Hidalgo. The subject is tempting and full of interest, but we have only space for a few well-considered sentences of the opinion of the chief justice of the court whose judgment we are reviewing.

"For centuries," he says, "the Pueblo Indians have lived in villages, in fixed communities, each having its own municipal or local government. As far as their history can be traced, they have been a pastoral and agricultural people, raising flocks and cultivating the soil. Since the introduction of the Spanish Catholic missionary into the country, they have adopted mainly not only the Spanish language but the religion of a Christian church. In every pueblo is erected a church, dedicated to the worship of God according to the form of the Roman Catholic religion, and in nearly all is to be found a priest of this church, who is recognized as their spiritual guide and advisor. They manufacture nearly all of their blankets, clothing, agricultural and culinary implements, etc. Integrity and virtue among them is fostered and encouraged. They are intelligent as most nations or people deprived of means or facilities for education. Their names, their customs, their habits, are similar to those of the people in whose midst they reside or in the midst of whom their pueblos are situated. The criminal records of the courts of the Territory scarcely contain the name of a Pueblo Indian. In short, they are a peaceable, industrious, intelligent, honest, and virtuous people. They are Indians only in feature, complexion, and a few of their habits; in all other respects superior to all but a few of the civilized Indian tribes of the country and the equal of the most civilized thereof. This description of the Pueblo Indians, I think, will be deemed by all who know them as faithful and true in all respects. Such was their character at the time of the acquisition of New Mexico by the United States; such is their character now.

"At the time the act of 1834 was passed there were no such Indians as these in the United States unless it be one or two reservations or tribes, such as the Senecas or Oneidas of New York, to whom, it is clear, the eleventh section of the statute could have no application. When it became necessary to extend the laws regulating intercourse with the Indians over our new acquisitions from Mexico, there was ample room for the exercise of those laws among the nomadic Apaches, Comanches, Navajoes, and other tribes, whose incapacity for self-government required both for themselves and for the citizens of the country this guardian care of the General Government.

"The Pueblo Indians, if, indeed, they can be called Indians, had nothing in common with this class. The degree of civilization which they had attained centuries before their willing submission to all laws of the Mexican Government, the full recognition by that Government of all their civil rights, including that of voting and holding office, and their absorption into the general mass of the population (except that they held their lands in common), all forbid the idea that they should be classed with the Indian tribes for whom the intercourse acts were made, or that in the intent of the act of 1851 its provisions were applicable to them. The tribes for whom the act of 1834 was made were those semi-independent tribes whom our Government has always recognized as exempt from our laws, whether within or without the limits of an organized State or Territory, and, in regard to their domestic government, left to their own rules and traditions; in whom we have recognized the capacity to make treaties and with whom the Governments, State and National, deal, with a few exceptions only, in their national or tribal character and not as individuals.

"If the Pueblo Indians differ from the other inhabitants of New Mexico in holding lands in common and in a certain patriarchal form of domestic life, they only resemble in this regard the Shakers and other communistic societies in this country, and can not for that reason be classed with the Indian tribes of whom we have been speaking."

However, in the case of United States v. Sandoval (213 U. S. 28), the Supreme Court took a different view of these Indians and held they were wards of the Government. In that case the court said:

"The people of the pueblos, although sedentary rather than nomadic in their inclinations and disposed to peace and industry, are nevertheless Indians in race, customs, and domestic government, always living in separate and isolated communities, adhering to primitive modes of life, largely influenced by superstition and fetichism and chiefly governed according to the crude customs inherited from their ancestors. They are essentially a simple, uninformed, and inferior people."

Speaking of its previous opinion in the Joseph case the court said that the observations there made as to the character of these Indians "were evidently based upon statements in the opinion of the Territorial court, then under review, which are at variance with other recognized sources of information now available."

Up to the time of the decision of the Sandoval case in 1913, it had been assumed by both the Territorial and State courts of New Mexico that the Pueblos had the right to alienate their property. From earliest times also the Pueblos had invited Spaniards and other non-Indians to dwell with them, and in many cases Pueblos and individual Indians attempted to convey lands to non-Indians which under the decision in the Sandoval case they were not competent to do. As a result there are now approximately 3,000 claimants to lands within the exterior boundaries of the Pueblo grants. The non-Indian claimants with their families comprise about 12,000 persons. With few exceptions the non-Indian claims range from a town lot of 25 feet front to a few acres in extent. It was stated, however, in the hearings by all parties that probably 80 per cent of the claims are not resisted by the Indians, and only about 20 per cent of the number will be contested.

The appeal sent out by "an Eastern Association of Indian Affairs" "to protect the threatened rights of the American Indian"—no date given, presumably some time in the autumn of 1922—I quote from as follows:

Its immediate task is the defeat of the iniquitous United States Senate bill 3855, which slipped through the Senate without a public hearing September 11, 1922. It is now in the House Committee on Indian Affairs. If it is reported favorably and passes the House, the Pueblo Indians of the Southwest will be robbed of their ancient land and water rights, successively confirmed by the Spanish, the Mexican, and the United States Governments. To annul these rights is to destroy the Pueblo Indian. The bill is, in fact, a betrayal of a Government trust, and it should not and can not be countenanced by anyone, regardless of party, who has any sense of justice or even an elemental conception of the duty of the Government toward the Indians.

The culture of the Pueblo Indian is unique, and without doubt the most complete expression of a stimulating group of psychology in arts and ceremonies to be found anywhere in America. Musicians go to the pueblo villages to study the songs, painters to picture the communal life. This irreplaceable culture, which enriches the Nation and should be conserved with intelligent care, is in immediate and grave danger.

It is perhaps impossible for me to make plain my personal viewpoint of this whole question. Throughout all America there seems a great distaste toward settling down to local responsibilities and duties of citizenship. The aftermath of war is still upon us and shows in the restlessness of many thousands who after the thrill and excitement of public speaking or of eager listening are ready to lay new burdens upon the General Government, to demand new expenditures from the depleted American Treasury, and lay increased taxes all unwittingly upon their own shoulders. All this in the name of justice.

During these Pueblo hearings it developed that the General Federation of Women's Clubs has in its division of industrial and social conditions a subcommittee the purpose of which may be inferred from the printed letterhead used by its chairman.

The following is copied from the letterhead:

A group of organized women in every community who can be depended upon to promote movements looking toward the betterment of life; General Federation of Women's Clubs, 1922–1924; president, Mrs. Thomas G. Winter, 2617 Dean Boulevard, Minneapolis, Minn.; general headquarters, Miss Lida Hafford, director, 1734 N Street, Washington, D. C.; department of public welfare, Mrs. Elmer Blair, chairman, 129 Wadsworth Avenue, New York City; division of industrial and social conditions, Mrs. Frank Ellis Humphrey, chairman, 467 Ralston Street, Reno, Nev.

Committee on fire protection: Miss Lloyd Marshall, chairman, 45 West Eleventh Street, New York City.

Committee on Indian welfare: Mrs. H. A. Atwood, chairman, Riverside, Calif.

Committee on industrial and business relations: Miss M. Lillian Williamson, chairman, 1201 Q Street NW., Washington, D. C.

Committee on institutional relations: Miss Julia K. Jaffray, chairman, 2 Rector Street, New York City.

It will be noticed that the explanatory heading of this letterhead says "A group of organized women in every community who can be depended upon to promote movements looking toward the betterment of life."

As I myself am one of these "organized women in every community" through federated club membership, I must speak with all due modesty. I can not forbear, however, to call attention to the marked recognition given the federation by the appointment of its president, Mrs. Thomas G. Winter, of Minnesota, as a member of the advisory committee of the Board of Limitation of Armaments. Also, by her having been suggested for membership in the President's Cabinet, for candidate for United States Senator, and last, but by no means least in its significance, by a recent statement attributed to her in public prints, of which I have seen neither denial nor confirmation over her own signature; she is said to have received an offer of $250,000 if she would "line up" the federated clubs in favor of certain legislation.

No president of an organization so far-reaching, so broad in its scope as is the Federation of Women's Clubs could possibly justify herself to the membership of the federation or to the American people if she failed to give all the facts in the case such publicity as would prevent any repetition of the "rotten politics" indicated in such a proposition.

Mrs. Atwood, of the Indian welfare committee, actuated, as I can not question, by noble and sincere motives, upon hearing that there was need among the Pueblos, immediately determined upon assuming activities in their behalf. The examinations of witnesses before the House Committee on Indian Affairs, as well as those before the subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, show beyond question how Mrs. Atwood was misled as to the real needs of the Pueblos. In the Senate hearings she described herself as "more historic minded than legal minded, which was natural, being a woman." This characterization of herself is proven as correct by the manner in which she allowed the affairs of her subcommittee to be administered.

I copy here the membership of the Committee on Indian Affairs for the Sixty-seventh Congress:

Homer P. Snyder, New York, chairman; Philip P. Campbell, Kansas; Royal C. Johnson, South Dakota; Frederick W. Dallinger, Massachusetts; Albert W. Jefferis, Nebraska; R. Clint Cole, Ohio; John Reber, Pennsylvania; Alice M. Robertson, Oklahoma; E. O. Leatherwood, Utah; Nestor Montoya, New Mexico; L. M. Gensman, Oklahoma; Sidney C. Roach, Missouri; Washington J. McCormick, Montana; Olger B. Burtness, North Dakota; Dan A. Sutherland, Alaska; Carl Hayden, Arizona; William J. Sears, Florida; Zebulon Weaver, North Carolina; F. B. Swank, Oklahoma; Ross A. Collins, Mississippi; Hampton P. Fulmer, South Carolina; Morgan G. Sanders, Texas; H. E. Devendorf, clerk.

With the exception of the chairman, Mr. SNYDER, and myself, this committee is entirely made up of lawyers and these lawyers represent constituents from Massachusetts to Arizona and from North Dakota to Texas, so that from regions where interest in the Indians arises from the work of church missionary societies or scientific students to those where the relations of Indians protected—or neglected, possibly, though not probably—in their rights to water, to school privileges, to suffrage, to exemption from taxation, often tend to produce tense situations.

The summing up of the hearings before the Indian Committee I quote from Report 1748:

That Stella M. Atwood, of Riverside, Calif., is the chairman of the Indian welfare committee of the General Federation of Women's Clubs.

That Mrs. Atwood was treated courteously by the Secretary of the Interior and by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs at all times, and her desire for information was facilitated by the officials.

That in the Pueblo matter she employed one John Collier, who became known as research agent of the General Federation of Women's Clubs.

That John Collier employed Mr. Francis C. Wilson, of Sante Fe, who assumed thereafter to be the attorney of the General Federation of Women's Clubs.

That John Collier spent many weeks among the pueblos, visiting each one, and holding meetings and exhorting the Indians.

That on November 5, 1922, at the instance of Mr. Collier, all of the several pueblos met, through delegates elected, at Santo Domingo, where a council was held which was attended by John Collier and Mr. Francis C. Wilson.

That at the Santo Domingo council a general appeal was framed and signed by representatives of each of the pueblos, which appeal was published and widely circulated.

That in December, 1922, Mr. John Collier came to Washington; that he was contributing articles describing the alleged condition of the Pueblo Indians, and particularly articles in the Sunset Magazine, which contain sensational statements, and statements, by implication at least, assailing the integrity of officials in the State of New Mexico as well as the officials of the Government.

That in January, 1923, 17 Pueblo Indians were brought to Washington, accompanied by Mr. Francis C. Wilson, attorney, and Mrs. Stella M. Atwood, chairman of the Indian welfare committee of the General Federation of Women's Clubs; that there was also in the party a Rev. Father Shuster, a Franciscan friar from the pueblo of Laguna; that the Indians were dressed in attractive and gaudy manner, said to be their ceremonial attire, and they were exhibited at meetings or functions in the city of Washington, later in New York City, and then Chicago.

That on the occasion of these meetings John Collier, Mrs. Atwood, and others delivered addresses and an appeal was made for funds, and that more than $6,000 was collected in this manner and paid to Mrs. Atwood.

That in addition to the moneys collected by Mrs. Atwood, other organizations were formed and were soliciting funds—among others, the Eastern Association of Indian Affairs in New York City—and appear to have collected about $2,300; that one Judson King issued an appeal, using the Collier propaganda, asking for contributions; there is no report as to what he may have collected.

To me Mr. Collier was an extremely interesting study. I insert here his introduction of himself in beginning the 75 pages of his testimony before the committee:

Mr. COLLIER. My name is John Collier; home, Mill Valley, Calif., a suburb of San Francisco. I am here as the research agent of the Indian welfare committee of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, of which Mrs. H. A. Atwood is chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you represent any other organizations?

Mr. COLLIER. Not in any explicit manner.

The CHAIRMAN. But do you represent any other organizations in any capacity?

Mr. COLLIER. I have merely a relation of cooperation and acquaintanceship with, I think, all of the organizations doing Indian work, such as the Chicago Indian Rights Association, the Pueblo Defense Committee in New York, and the Eastern Association on Indian Affairs, but I am not an officer or member of any of them.

The CHAIRMAN. But you are doing some work for them now?

Mr. COLLIER. No; except as my work may assist them or their work may assist Mrs. Atwood's organization.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not my intention to ask you any questions, at least at this moment, but I think it would be well for you in starting your statement to begin with your connection with this particular work.

Mr. COLLIER. That I was going to do.

The CHAIRMAN. You may make your statement in your own way.

Mr. COLLIER. I desire to state about my own connection with the Indian problem——

The CHAIRMAN (interposing). By the Indian problem do you mean Pueblo matters?

Mr. COLLIER. That is what it leads up to. I began with the Pueblos November 1, 1919, when I resigned from the position of director of community organization for the commission on immigration and housing of the State of California and went with my family, my wife and three boys, into the Pueblo country. My wife and myself are both social investigators by training. We spent from September, 1919, to August, 1920, in the northern pueblos—that is, the pueblos north of Santa Fe, with Taos as our most frequent center of operations. During that time I, with my wife, made an intensive study of the Pueblo customs and conditions. Thereafter I returned to California. Our work during that period was voluntary and our expenses were met by ourselves.

He and his wife both "social investigators by training." What did this social investigation among the Pueblos lead up to?

First of all, to publicity and financial profit for himself, largely secured through his innocent and kindly dupe and victim, Mrs. Atwood.

I quote from Mr. Collier in the January issue of the Sunset Magazine:

The Pueblos through their councils and governors have protested unceasingly, a vain, despairing protest across 200 years. The civil authorities—corrupt, inert, fearful of the vengeance upon themselves, of the vengeance of the squatters—have refused to eject the trespassers.

Two hundred years, and no trained social investigator until now.

So far as I know no effort was made to bring before the House committee the delegation of Pueblos which Mr. Collier brought to Washington, though I did see them in many poses in the illustrated newspapers. These perishing people were able to advance from their personal funds $2,800 for their traveling expenses.

I have seen really wronged Indians who had suffered every conceivable injustice, who, crushed—not conquered—in war, had had millions of acres taken from them, who had been driven into exile, only to be followed thither by more oppression. The impossibility of securing $10 for traveling expenses of Indian delegates prevented the turning down of the iniquitous treaty of 1866 by which the Creek Indians were robbed of millions of dollars. The Creeks were without the barest necessities of life, and famine and pestilence stalked grimly among them. Had a delegation from them been sent to Washington in protest, the only garb possible for most of them, whether soldiers of the Union or of the Confederacy, would have been the tattered blue of cast-aside Federal uniforms.

I examined carefully the Jones-Leatherwood bill, prepared by the Collier following. It is what is to be expected—such at least has been my own conclusion from the many "social investigator" measures which march in ever-increasing numbers toward the United States Treasury. Salaries of commissioners and judges, of clerks and stenographers, appropriations for armies of laborers—and incidentally voters—in irrigation projects. In the Collier articles and in all his accompanying actions his ostrichlike attitude seems to me ill concealed in the sand of an alleged humane interest—a real early start of the political campaign of 1924. I even go a little further and say that "weather indications" are that we shall soon have great claims from California of Indians despoiled to the extent of so many millions of dollars as will make all past legal speculation in Indian claims pale into insignificance.

The evidence before the two committees—Senate and House—showed conclusively that whereas the alarm call for aid for starving human beings and their live stock, their source of support, when the ready response of generous givers followed in sums for which no one seems to have been officially accountable, and the total of which could not—possibly businesslike accounting of other people's benefactions is not included in the training of "social investigators"—be determined from anyone. Admittedly over $6,000 was raised and of this amount the closest questioning failed to show that more than $400 had been sent to the Indian sufferers in New Mexico.

Mr. Collier has much to say of the beautiful, mystic rites and religious ceremonies of the Pueblos and quite naively after telling of them he went on to say that he and his wife desired that their three boys might be made members of the tribe and admitted to their secrets in the perpetuation of these rites, because of the benefit it would be to the boys. To their regret the adoption was not in accordance with their unwritten laws, and they were not admitted.

In the March number of the Sunset Magazine, Mr. Collier has many things to say about the Indians of Oklahoma, which are so false that their publication is unaccountable, or would be if through all the Pueblo affairs there had not so evidently been the great underlying purpose of discrediting the Interior Department, the Office of Indian Affairs, and the Congress of the United States.

No one living has probably a better right to question Mr. Collier in his statements than I.

In support of my claim I make no apology for presenting the following family history: In 1825 my maternal grandfather with his bride went from New England to Georgia as a missionary to the Cherokee Indians. The especial work to which he was assigned was to utilize the Cherokee alphabet—the matchless work of Sequoyah, one of the greatest of Americans—in preparing for the Cherokees a literature in their own language. A few years later came the exile of the Cherokee people. No darker page can be found in American history than this story of the Cherokees—a story indelibly burned into my mind as I heard it in my early childhood from those who had lived through where thousands perished. My grandfather, ordered to leave the Cherokees, refused to forsake his gospel ministrations among them at the mandate of the State of Georgia, of which State he was not a citizen, and was arrested, tried, and sentenced to four years' hard labor in the penitentiary. The case was appealed in the courts and, on the ground that the State had no jurisdiction in the land of the Cherokees, was decided in the Supreme Court of the United States in his favor. The then President, Andrew Jackson, in sympathy with the State of Georgia, ignored this decision. The Governor of Georgia said the Supreme Court had nothing to do with the sovereign State of Georgia, and my grandfather and another missionary remained in the penitentiary at hard labor until, after serving two of the four years to which they were sentenced, they were pardoned by the governor and went West with the Indians. Until his death my grandfather continued his work, results of which still live among thousands of Cherokees.

My father in 1849 came as a missionary to the Creek Indians, the neighbors of the Cherokees, and my mother upon her marriage to him joined him in like work for these Indians, whose language was entirely different from that of the Cherokees. In the War between the States my father's family became exiles and refugees and, as again and again war has laid its heavy hand upon these Indian people, we, their missionaries, suffered with them. In my immediate family in the 98 years of our missionary history 26 persons have been engaged in religious and educational work among them. I have seen the evolution of the Indian, and I know of actual personal knowledge, through a life fast approaching the allotted three score years and ten, the story of the Indians of the Five Civilized Tribes.

There are among them to-day no less interesting examples of Indian communities than are found among the Pueblos. The inherited religion of these people is beautiful in its simplicity and near akin to the Christian religion. They were not, are not, pagans, but men whose so-called vices are really the primitive virtues. They worship the Great Spirit; they live a communal life that is beautiful in its hospitality and golden-rule simplicity, and which, if such a life may continue to be practicable under the laws of Oklahoma, will yet be worked out to an ideal condition. Gathered around their sacred fires, the mystic ceremonies of their faith are not so far remote from Christianity but that the acceptance of the Christian religion comes without violent reaction to them.

The ceremonial dances of men, of women, and of both sexes are strangely appealing in their stately dignity; the athletic games of youth and older people are marvelous in their clean, fine intercourse of the sexes. Crime is abhorrent to them, and liquor, the source of most Indian troubles, is never tolerated at their gatherings. These people have had arbitrarily conferred upon them American citizenship and individual ownership of land. Through their own efforts they are adapting themselves as nearly as may be to living their own life under these undesired conditions. They can not understand why faith was broken with them when communal rights to the home they bought in this western land were guaranteed in the deed to be theirs "so long as grass grows and water runs." They can not understand how even the treaty acceptance by the larger portion of their fellow tribesmen could take from them the rights of communal ownership they still claim. They are an intelligent people, who keep the records of their council in their own language. This condition is paralleled in almost every particular among a branch of the Creeks. The tragedy of the Five Tribes has been that there are cases in which educated Indians have failed in honor toward their own tribesmen who have—and for the sake of gain—allowed them to become the prey of unscrupulous grafters. But, as one of this class of educated Indians once said to me, "You can not protect ignorance from itself"; and this has been the plea: "If I don't rob them somebody else will."

My practical knowledge of Indian affairs is not confined to missionary work among the Five Tribes. I went directly from college to the Indian Office in Washington, where I spent six years of service—the first woman to enter upon actual duty in that bureau—the salary enabling me to help my parents in the education of their younger children, till this need no longer existing I went again into actual school work. Two years were spent at the Carlisle School, from which I was called back to the Indian Territory by the death of my father, which followed closely the destruction by fire of the mission where so many years of his life had been given to a boarding school for 100 Creek boys and girls. He left me the sacred legacy of continuing his work. I could not preach, but I could try to carry out some of his unrealized ideals. So under the auspices of Presbyterian Home Missions I was enabled to raise funds for the building of several schools. All moneys raised were paid directly to the mission board, and paid out by them. We built cottages in which there was the family life and an individuality which should render more successful the fight against trachoma and tuberculosis. I have seen little children come to these cottage homes dirty and vermin infested. Many of these little children are now useful citizens of Oklahoma—home makers, useful wives and mothers, farmers, teachers, ministers of the gospel.

After changes caused by the Curtis Act I was for five years the Government supervisor of Creek schools.

During all these years I have seen that wonderful progress among the people of the Five Tribes, of which I may give a personal illustration, in the history of one of my schools which grew from two little girls into what is now the University of Tulsa.

While connected with the Indian Office I utilized my time out of hours in learning shorthand, and on returning to the Indian Territory was for years the only shorthand writer in the Territory. I was called upon in many an emergency to keep an official record of important Indian councils and investigations. As a result of my efforts in connection with the work of a Government commission to make peace between two warring factions I found such favor when a satisfactory agreement was written out by me for the commission that later at a peace council of many tribes I was invited to be present and through participation in their sacred ritual to become one of their organization. As I could not smoke the resplendently decorated peace pipe in one part of the ritual I was directed to lay it above my heart instead. I have kept watch through the years of the tribesmen with whom I took the peace obligation so long ago—an obligation never broken. I believe I am the sole remaining survivor. I, too, have kept the peace faith. In the fulfillment of duty as I see it I protest against such action as Mr. Collier and his kind would take in depriving many thousands of helpless Indian people of the strong defense they can receive through the Interior Department.

These my last words as a Member of the Sixty-seventh Congress are in defense of the means used by our Government for the protection of the Indian people. I do not claim perfection—that is not found anywhere—nor that the employees of the Indian Department are all what they should be, but the machinery is the best now obtainable, and friends of the Indian should take an intelligent interest and through actual knowledge aid by helpful cooperation.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, in the waning hours of the Sixty-seventh Congress, a record four-session Congress, I can not help but give vent to my opinion and observations of the action of the majority in the consideration of measures affecting immigration.

I feel that I am safe in saying, Mr. Speaker, that this Congress has not conscientiously, wisely, and sanely considered this most important question which so vitally affects the needs and welfare of our Nation. Blinded and swayed by prejudice, by the hue and cry of the professional immigration restrictionists, by the after-the-war hysteria propagandists, who have clamored for total restriction, the Congress has failed to enact such needed legislation as would prevent the continued separation of the families of American citizens and American soldiers. I should rather say that they failed to rectify the terrible injustice committed in the passage of the act of May 19, 1921, which failed to exempt the wives and children, parents, and grandparents of American citizens from the quota limitations. To-day thousands of wives, children, and parents of American citizens and American soldiers are suffering and starving on the other side, unable to obtain visé; others estopped at the ports of embarkation, after traveling thousands of miles to such ports, to depart for the United States; and those of that heart-rending and pitiful class who have arrived at the portals of Ellis Island, all of whom can not enter our liberty loving country because they are declared in "excess of the so-called 3 per cent quota." This Congress has turned the "stone ear" to these supplicants who are entitled to every consideration by reason of their being blood kin. Must the thought be harbored that this Congress has deliberately delayed the amending of the hastily and ill-considered, yes, inhuman act of May 19, 1921, so that the wives and children would be prevented from joining their loved ones? It is true that the House committee favorably reported H. R. 14273, which exempted from the quota limitations any immigrant who is the husband, wife, father, mother, unmarried minor brother or sister, or unmarried orphan niece or nephew of a citizen of the United States, and also extended exemption to an immigrant who is the husband, wife, or unmarried minor child of an alien permanently resident in the United States for at least two years who had filed his declaration of intention.

This bill to a degree would have eliminated the many hardships caused by the present vicious act. Of course the bill also contained other features which, to my mind, would have eliminated the tremendous hardships to which the present law subjects thousands of well-meaning and, under the law, admissible aliens, who, due to the unworkability of the present law, are frequently held at Ellis Island for 30, and in some instances 60, days, and thousands of them deported because the number that can come in in one month from any of these countries had been reached. Any person who has given this question and these abuses and hardships thought or consideration, or is acquainted with this inhuman treatment, can not but resent the hardships and suffering to which these people are subjected. And especially it must be borne in mind that the majority of them are the fathers or mothers, wives, and children of American citizens and in many cases of American soldiers who volunteered to sacrifice their lives for our country.

Several of the provisions in the proposed reported bill would have eliminated these unnecessary hardships; and though the percentage has been reduced from 3 to 2 per cent, I feel if the consideration of it had been permitted by Republican leaders that the same would have passed, though I myself am unalterably opposed to the provision which is based upon the 1890 census, which is, as I have stated in the minority report, a willful and deliberate discrimination against the so-called newer immigration, such as Polish, Bohemian, Lithuanian, Jewish, Slovenian, Hungarian, Italian, and so forth.

Mr. Speaker, it can not be denied by any Member of this House that the reason for the existing labor shortage is directly attributable to the unworkable provisions and limitations of the present restrictive immigration act. Can it be humanely considered by any body of reflecting or thinking men that a man—it matters not in what station of life he may be—in order to engage successfully in his life's work, will not demand the presence of those near and dear to him—his wife and children—that it is his greatest and sovereign right that no man-made law can overcome? Can it be claimed that the working of the present law has been in conformity with truth, propriety, and justice?

Is it possible that the membership of this House, having received the fair and unbiased reports of our labor and immigration officials of the terrible existing conditions created by the carrying out of the present act, is still immune to the torture and mental anguish of those who entered our portals at Ellis Island, who have gazed upon our land of sunshine and liberty, only to be torn from the reach and stretching arms of their loved ones and to be returned to the port from whence they sailed? It requires, Mr. Speaker, no process of deduction on the part of any fair-thinking Member of this House to realize that the cause for the exodus of the overwhelming number of male laboring immigrants is because of the failure of the committee to consider at the time the present act was passed the incorporation of that humane provision which would prevent the continued and enforced separation of the families of those who constituted the labor-producing force of our Nation. They failed utterly to consider the cause for the emigration or departure from this country in the past two and one-half years of over 100,000 male immigrant laborers, and neither did they calculate that under the present law it would take five or more years before a like number of laboring immigrants could be again admitted to take the places of those who left. In short, Mr. Speaker, the reason for the large emigration of laboring immigrants is due to their inability to bring their families to this country. They have departed to their native homes to prepare for their coming to this country, but find that the visé requirements and the quota limitations prevent their coming at this time. Thus they wait their turn on the other side. It has taken nearly two years for the uncontroverted fact to be borne upon the minds of those responsible for the enactment of the immigration-restriction law that human injustice has been done; that the very prosperity and welfare of our Nation is in jeopardy by reason of the stoppage of labor immigration and the emigration of those who have been unable to bring their families to the United States. It is but proper, and perhaps will serve to enlighten a large part of the membership who are unfamiliar with the present chaotic labor conditions, to hear or read the expression of some of the foremost manufacturers and employers of labor in this country. The following from George D. Roper, president of the George D. Roper Corporation, Rockford, Ill.:

With the laws in force now regarding immigration the manufacturers will not be able to bring their production to a level to meet increasing business, due to the fact that all skilled labor requires a certain proportion of unskilled labor which is not available at this time.

It is very essential that the quota of immigrants to this country be increased, and the aliens returning to their respective countries should be taken into consideration in arriving at the number allowed to enter here.

I also submit a letter received from R. C. Marshall, jr., general manager of the Associated General Contractors of America, with offices in Washington, D. C., whose views will serve to show the danger of curtailment in the building and construction industries this coming year by reason of the positive and certain common-labor shortage:

THE ASSOCIATED GENERAL CONTRACTORS OF AMERICA, INC.,
Washington, D. C., November 21, 1922.

Hon. ADOLPH J. SABATH,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: Inclosed herewith is a copy of Index of November 11, on the last page of which are some statistics in connection with the present operation of the immigration laws. From this you will note that there is a net decrease of 65,000 in common labor in this country for the 13 months ending July of this year. Conservatively estimated, we need 100,000 additional common laborers every year to make up for actual losses, so that the net loss during that period was at least 165,000.

Obviously that is a very serious situation, and if continued for many years will have a marked effect on our whole national existence. That the present immigration law is not working to the advantage of the country is apparent.

Very respectfully,
R. C. MARSHALL, Jr.,
General Manager.

I also insert the comment of Ross Bowles, secretary-manager East Side Employers' Association, East St. Louis, Ill.:

We are at present in need of common labor for industrial work. A careful survey will show that our industries are operating about 75 per cent normal working force, but with a labor shortage under these conditions it would be considerably more drastic when industries are ready for normal operations.

Outside of industrial circles there is a general belief that we do not need any immigration, and it is going to be some job to convince our educators, preachers, and professional men and general public that it is necessary to increase immigration in order to keep industry moving. That is a big task and must be done in a big way.

The following telegram was sent to me at the time when the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization of the House was holding hearings, upon the conclusion of which a bill was to be drafted providing for permanent immigration legislation:

CHICAGO, ILL., February 6, 1923.

Hon. ADOLPH J. SABATH,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

Sound immigration law and policy of greatest importance to industrial prosperity and stability of country. Such law should be responsive to our economic needs while safely protecting our social structure. Manufacturers vitally interested in this matter and keenly alive to social as well as economic needs. Urge you to introduce and support resolution for appointment of competent commission by President to study immigration problem in light of our economic needs and present world conditions, such commission to report by January 1, 1924, so that a permanent law may be enacted on basis of report effective when present emergency law expires July, next year.

NATIONAL METAL TRADES ASSOCIATION.

Not only is there a shortage of common labor but also that of the domestic class. The womanhood of the United States is suffering because they are unable to obtain the services of domestic servants. Mr. Augustine Davis, president of the Davis Equipment Corporation, sums up this phase of the seriousness of the situation by remarking:

The mothers in our own country generally find it next to impossible to obtain the aid necessary to care for their families properly.

The extreme difficulty in securing such assistance results in imperfect home sanitation, neglect of children, ill health and despondency in overworked mothers, unsatisfactory food preparation, lessens desire to home ownership, discourages marriage, increases unhealthy and boarding-house life, tends to the disruption of families, leads to divorce, and is no small factor in "race suicide," all of which has a most detrimental effect on the morals and progress of our people.

And yet, Mr. Speaker, despite these reports and others of similar nature which have come to the notice of the Committees on Immigration and Naturalization of both Houses during the past 18 months, this Congress has neglected to correct the human injustice that has been done, nor have they wisely enacted a measure which would alleviate or prevent a labor shortage which is bound and certain to affect the welfare and prosperity of our Nation.

I also refer to the statement made by Nicholas Murray Butler, president of Columbia College, in New York City, as follows:

If the present narrow and unreasonable immigration policy be continued, the United States will in less than a generation face an economic crisis of the greatest magnitude. Our agriculture, our wage-workers, our industries, and our system of transportation would all be embarrassed to the point of disaster through inability to find sufficient willing workers to take the place of those who will of necessity disappear during the next few years.

Though House bill 14273, favorably reported by the House Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, failed to be considered, I desire to submit, for insertion in the RECORD, the views of the minority. The minority report I hope will be read by the new incoming membership, who at the beginning of the regular session of Congress will be called upon to consider and act on a measure which should be drafted to rectify the defects and inhuman provisions of the present restrictive law. I am satisfied that the new incoming Members will treat this important question without bias and with full consideration of the imperative needs of industry, so that the welfare and prosperity of our great country may be assured.

VIEWS OF THE MINORITY.

The undersigned members of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization dissent from the report of the majority on H. R. 14273, which is offered as an amendment to S. 4092.

Ever since the 3 per cent restriction quota law and its amendments went into effect, just complaints from every section of the country have been registered against its harsh, inhuman, and unworkable provisions. This was recognized by the Secretary of Labor and the Bureau of Immigration, who were compelled to urge the temporary admission of the wives and children of American citizens and declarants who had not been permitted to enter under the law, owing to its drastic provisions. Public opinion forced the adoption of two amendments which permitted the entry of several thousand Armenian refugees, yet a large number of refugees, as well as the wives and children of American citizens, were deported when the quota of 3 per cent had been reached. No consideration was given to the fact that many of them had left their homes long before they had any reason to believe or expect that the quota of the country of their nativity would be exhausted and although they had received their visés. The bill in a measure aims to remedy the harsh provisions of the present law which caused so much suffering and to prevent in the future a repetition of the same unfortunate conditions. If this provision had been originally adopted, as some of us urged, much of the suffering of those held at Ellis Island and other ports of entry and finally deported would have been avoided. Consequently, we heartily approve the adoption of this provision, which will permit the near blood relatives to enter as nonquota immigrants.

The provision allowing a basic quota of 400 for all countries will prevent the return and deportation of peoples of small countries who especially have suffered under the unworkable provisions of the present law.

We also heartily approve of the provisions providing for the thorough examination and investigation of immigrants in the ports of embarkation before leaving for the United States, as well as the extremely strict provisions which will require immigration certificates. In fact, we favor every provision which tends to strengthen and safeguard entry and make impossible the admission of any individual immigrant who can not in every way comply with every provision of the present stringent immigration laws. We are irrevocably opposed to the admission of even a single immigrant who is not physically, mentally, and morally fit eventually to become a real American citizen.

We do, however, protest against the reduction in the quota from 3 to 2 per cent, and especially against the per cent being based on the 1890 census in lieu of that of 1920 or 1910. We are of the opinion that it is a deliberate discrimination against the so-called newer immigration. If it was not intended to arbitrarily discriminate against the immigration from Austria, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Italy, Norway, Poland, Rumania, Sweden, and other countries, why did the proponents of the measure take the 1890 census? It is too apparent that it is intended not to reduce immigration from Great Britain and Germany but to completely estop almost all immigration from all of the other countries. At the time when the committee was considering the bill they had before them the actual figures showing what the result would be if the census of 1890 was adopted. It furnishes the most conclusive proof of positive discrimination which can be found. For the information of the House and to prove our contention we submit the following figures showing the number admissible under the censuses of 1890, 1900, and 1910:

It certainly will not be contended by those who favor this measure that the reason for its adoption was a failure of display of loyalty and patriotism of those who came from southwestern Europe. If this apprehension did exist, then the most complete answer destroying such apprehension is found in an article appearing in Colliers, entitled "Eight American soldiers," referring to John N. F. Bilitzki, Lonnie J. Moscow, Aloizy Nagowski, Isaac Rabinowitz, Epifanio Affatato, Wasyl Kolonoczyk, Daniel Moskowitz, and Anthony Sclafoni.

EIGHT AMERICAN SOLDIERS.

(By Samuel McCoy.)

"The heroism of the eight Americans whom I am about to name was duplicated in every one of the hundreds of regiments which were sent from America to serve in France; I name these eight men merely because their war records happen to be before me at the moment and because much has been said of late in regard to the proper qualifications for American citizenship.

"Each of these men was awarded the distinguished-service cross. Twenty thousand men who fought in the same division to which they belonged all acquitted themselves with honor in the face of danger. A thousand men of the division were singled out to appear in the divisional citations for feats of heroism performed in that campaign. But these eight were ranked even higher than all these. They were of the handful who won the distinguished-service cross—a decoration awarded only "for extraordinary heroism in action."

"The first man, a sergeant, in the assault launched against the seemingly impregnable Hindenburg line, 'although twice wounded, refused to leave the field, but remained with his platoon, exhibiting magnificent courage and bravery, until he was wounded a third time. His devotion to duty set a splendid example to the men of his company.'

"The second, a corporal, in the same fearful fire of the enemy, 'was an advance scout for his platoon. The platoon was temporarily halted by machine-gun fire from a section of the enemy trench in their immediate front. He rushed through the heavy enemy fire to the trench, and at the point of his rifle compelled 12 of the enemy to surrender. He then signaled for the platoon to advance.'

"The third, also a corporal, 'left shelter, went forward under intense machine-gun fire, and carried a wounded officer to safety. In accomplishing this mission he was severely wounded.'

"The fourth man, a private, first class, 'when the advance of his battalion was checked by heavy machine-gun fire, went forward, with two other soldiers, under heavy fire to reconnoiter the enemy positions. By effective rifle fire they drove the gunners from two machine-gun nests into a dugout near by, which they captured, together with 35 prisoners, including 3 officers.'

"The fifth man, also a private, 'after being severely wounded by shrapnel, took shelter in a shell hole somewhat in advance of his company, from which he had become separated in the fog and smoke. He saved the lives of four of his wounded comrades, who were occupying the shell hole, by throwing live grenades, which had been tossed into the shell hole by members of his own company in the rear, into the enemy's lines.'

"The sixth, a private, 'under heavy shell and machine-gun fire, left the shelter of his trench, and going forward under a thick smoke screen, single handed, captured between 30 and 40 prisoners * * *. Three weeks later in a second battle, after the advance of his company had been stopped by strong, hostile machine-gun fire, he with three companions, advanced far ahead of the front line to attack an enemy position located in a large farmhouse. By skillful maneuvering in the broad daylight they covered all entrances to the house and forced the surrender of the entire force of the enemy, numbering 36 men and 2 officers. During the exploit they killed two of the enemy who attempted to take cover in the cellar.'

"The seventh, a private, 'exhibited exceptional bravery by leaving shelter and going into an open field under heavy machine-gun and shell fire to rescue wounded soldiers.'

"The eighth man, also a private, 'while the advance against the Hindenburg line was at its height, seeing an American machine gunner exposed to the enemy, ran to his assistance. On the way he was seriously wounded, but continued on, reaching the position and using his body to shield the gunner while the latter poured a fire into the enemy. He was wounded three times, finally losing consciousness, but after his wounds were dressed he insisted on leaving the field unaided.'

"The names of these eight American soldiers, all of whom are still living, are John N. F. Bilitzki, Lonnie J. Moscow, Aloizy Nagowski, Isaac Rabinowitz, Epifanio Affatato, Wasyl Kolonoczyk, Daniel Moskowitz, and Antony Sclafoni."

We realize that the committee can not report a bill which would satisfy the two extremes, viz, first, those alarmists and extremists who at all times clamor even against the admission of the wives and children of our citizens and soldiers and who insist upon completely closing our doors to every immigrant, regardless how deserving and desirable; second, the class who for economical, personal, and financial advantages desire that the doors be opened not only to permit without limitation the entry of skilled but of all unskilled labor.

We feel that the adoption of the 1890 census is unjustifiable not only for the reason that it is discriminatory but because it will also prevent the admission of from 60,000 to 75,000 laborers, who will shortly be greatly needed. We are not interested in supplying, as some may term, "cheap labor," but we are deeply concerned in the welfare of the United States, whose prosperity depends upon having at least a sufficient amount of unskilled labor. This can be obtained, in a measure, by using the population figures of 1920 or 1910 as a basis in lieu of the 1890 census, as the majority has adopted. We doubt whether our northern and eastern unskilled labor requirements can be drawn from the South without at the same time injuring the growing southern industries. Surely, under the stringent provisions of the bill, no temporary common labor can be obtained from Mexico, as was done in 1918 and 1919, to relieve the shortage of labor in the cotton and sugar-beet fields in the Southern and Southwestern States.

It can not be truthfully denied that most of the hard, common, and manual work performed in the United States has been done during the past 30 or 40 years by immigrants coming from those countries designated as southern and southeastern Europe. Such work for the past century has always been performed by the then coming immigrants.

As has often been stated on the floor of the House and reiterated in the press of the country, the common understanding was that the present 3 per cent quota law was temporarily enacted for the sole purpose of safeguarding the United States against an anticipated influx of immigrants after the war. Since the enactment of the measure it was shown that many of the fears which were expressed were unfounded in fact, because several of the countries have not even made full use of their quotas. The 3 per cent quota law would have permitted the coming of over 355,000 immigrants, but approximately, in the last year, only 309,556 arrived. Further confirmation of our statement to the effect that those who would be coming would be mainly women and children is shown by the statement of Mr. Wixon, of the Bureau of Immigration, who testified before the Committee on Appropriations as follows:

"That of the 309,556 immigrant aliens admitted during the first fiscal year, 95,846 of that number is represented by unmarried females and 31,980 represented by males under 16 years of age; or, in other words, nearly one-half of the entire number of immigrant aliens arriving is represented by what might be termed as dependent aliens, regarded strictly from an immigration standpoint. Something which surprised me more than anything else when statistics for the last fiscal year were compiled was the fact that our entire net gain in population is represented by 104,326 females and 6,518 males under 16 years of age. By that I mean that the figures given embrace the number of aliens arriving over those departing, and, as will be seen, we did not gain a single male over 16 years of age, the fact being that the number of males over that age departing was considerably in excess of the number arriving. It should be taken into consideration also that of males arriving a large number of them were over the age of 55 years and more or less dependent. In fact, a great number of them were absolutely dependent."

The committee has also refused to make provision for the admission of domestics, admitted by all so greatly needed. We desire to call specific attention to a partial statement made by Mr. Augustine Davis, president Davis Automatic Equipment Corporation, appearing in American Industries, entitled "Need more of the domestic class" (Hearings, 6–C):

"The mothers in our own country generally find it next to impossible to obtain the aid necessary to care for their families properly.

"The extreme difficulty in securing such assistance results in imperfect home sanitation, neglect of children, ill health and despondency in overworked mothers, unsatisfactory food preparation, lessens desire for home ownership, discourages marriage, increases unhealthy hotel and boarding-house life, tends to the disruption of families, leads to divorce, and is no small factor in 'race suicide,' all of which has a most detrimental effect on the morals and progress of our people."

Considerable stress has been laid by the proponents of this measure that during the past two or three years immigration has consisted mainly of women and children. It must be borne in mind that during the entire war period, due to war conditions, it was impossible for husbands to bring over their wives and children. We believe that the highest morality can be attained, and for the best interest of home and country, that the wife and minor children should be under the same roof with the husband. We believe in the uniting of families; it brings peace and contentment; it helps to improve the home life in every community.

After many years of most careful study of the immigration question, and after most mature reflection and deliberation, we are of the opinion that if the individual Members of the House could give to this most important subject of immigration the same thorough consideration and study which we have given that they would reach the same conclusions we have, namely, that it is a most serious error to adopt the 1890 census as the basis of calculation for admission.

I wonder what possible excuse the Republican Party will be able to offer to the 20,000,000 members of the Federated Council of the Churches of Christ in America and the 10,000,000 members of women's clubs who, through their representatives, for months so persistently pleaded and appealed for the admission of the few thousand starving Armenian orphans whose fathers, yes, and mothers, have been murdered just because they were Christians.

Mr. UPSHAW. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, in commenting on the Disarmament Conference Thomas A. Edison very strikingly said:

It is all right to scrap our battleships, but we must keep up our research work.

Congress is hereby placed on notice that the engineering experiment station bill, H. R. 12542, introduced by me, is to be reintroduced when Congress convenes again, and Congress will be asked to pass it promptly. In the interim the Members of the House and the Senate are asked to give careful consideration to the great benefit of this legislation to their respective States and also to the fact that their respective agricultural and mechanical college has urged the importance of such legislation.

OBJECT OF THE BILL.

The object of these engineering experiment stations is stated plainly in section 2 of the bill as follows: That it shall be the object and duty of said experiment stations to conduct original research, perform in any or all branches of engineering, manufacturing, and the industries and the sciences related thereto, and to compile data relating to such researches for the promotion of the same in the interest of the people of the United States, particularly such as are engaged in engineering and industry; also researches, investigations, and experiments in connection with the production, preparation, and transportation of materials utilized in engineering and industry; also researches, investigations, and experiments relating to transportation, road building, drainage, irrigation, flood protection, aeronautics, aerodynamics, fuels, power, lighting, heating, refrigeration, ventilation, sanitation, architecture, war activities, and such other researches, experiments, tests, and investigations bearing upon the industries, occupations, and the public welfare of the people of the United States as may in each case be deemed advisable, having due regard to the varying conditions, resources, and the needs of the people of the respective States and Territories in which said stations may be established, and to cooperate with the agricultural experiment stations in its respective State in the study of problems and the conduct of experiments common to the fields of both engineering and agriculture.

RELATION TO OUR AGRICULTURAL AND MECHANICAL COLLEGES AND AGRICULTURAL RESEARCH.

In 1862 the United States, recognizing the importance of subsidizing and encouraging education in agriculture and engineering, passed the Morrill Act of 1862 appropriating land to every State for the establishing of the agricultural and mechanical colleges. By 1890 this educational work had so fairly demonstrated its importance and value that Congress supplemented the original act by appropriating a sum of money annually to each State which had fulfilled the requirements of the original act.

As the United States was largely an agricultural nation in the beginning, these colleges of agriculture and mechanic arts naturally devoted special attention to agriculture, except in certain States in the North, where the importance of industry and industrial developments toward the adequate consideration of engineering subjects, such as in Massachusetts, New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Michigan, and Illinois.

AGRICULTURAL EXPERIMENT STATIONS.

The need of organized agricultural research soon began to be felt, and after investigations of the agricultural research of Germany and other countries, a bill was introduced and passed by Congress in 1887 known as the Hatch Act appropriating $15,000 annually to each State and Territory for the conduct of agricultural experiment stations in the agricultural and mechanical colleges, or in other colleges which might be designated by Congress as perfectly qualified to conduct this agricultural research work. Later in 1906 Congress doubled this appropriation by the Adams Act and we now have the most perfect system of organized and cooperating engineering direction incorporating agricultural research in the world. These agricultural experiment stations have been of incalculable value to every State and Territory.

EXTENSION WORK CONTEMPLATED.

The importance of this educational work and research in agriculture became so important that in 1914 Congress passed the Smith-Lever Act appropriating a large sum of money for each State to conduct agricultural extension work. Our system of engineering and agricultural education, as aided by the Federal Government, is therefore practically complete on the side of agriculture, having, first, research as performed by our agricultural experiment stations, which advances and improves the method of agriculture, horticulture, farming, and stock raising; second, education as conducted by the agricultural colleges; and third, the work of extension, which carries a certain amount of educational opportunities to the people interested in agriculture throughout the entire State, and by means of the county farm agents and large volumes of printed information the work of the agricultural experiment stations is extended to benefit the people in each and every county of the United States.

ENGINEERING EXPERIMENT STATIONS.

On the other hand, as relates to engineering we have progressed no further than the original Morrill Act of 1862 and 1890, which gives a little but important regular encouragement to engineering education in every State and Territory. For the past 15 years or more our educators, scientists, engineers, and business men in every State and Territory have been appealing to Congress to pass a bill appropriating each State and Territory a reasonable sum of money to organize a work of engineering experiment stations in each State and Territory, chiefly in connection with the present agricultural and mechanical colleges, but in any State wherever the State legislature may decide for the purpose of paralleling the important work of the agricultural experiment stations and to develop our past natural researches and important industries throughout the United States.

THE UNITED STATES TEMPLE OF EDUCATION.

The present situation and the need of organized engineering and industrial research is visualized on the chart, which has been prepared by Mr. Phinehas V. Stephens, a consulting engineer, an honored graduate of Georgia "Tech," who is secretary of the National Committee of Engineering Experiment Station Legislation, and who has devoted special attention to this important legislation and the industrial development of the United States for the past 20 years. It is largely due to his lifelong devotion to this cause of the development of the natural researches of America and American industry and organized research that this legislation has passed through various stages of development and perfection until it has reached its present form, which is generally considered the most efficient, complete, and universally satisfactory than any bill previously considered by Congress for this purpose.

THE APPROPRIATION RELATIVELY SMALL.

The total appropriation of this bill after three years of operation is only $50,000 a year to each State, making a total annually of only $2,500,000. This appropriation is one of the best investments that the United States could possibly make, as it will increase Federal taxes on manufacture and property values in a short time far in excess of the amount appropriated. It is one of very few appropriations of the Federal Government which will secure a large return upon the investment from the business and financial point of view. This will help reduce the heavy burden of taxation now resting upon our people.

ENCOURAGE AND MAINTAIN FOR UNIFORM NATIONAL PROSPERITY.

This appropriation will mobilize and utilize over $100,000,000 worth of the finest engineering and scientific equipment in American colleges and universities. This equipment is now used largely for educational purposes, but should also be utilized for training young men and women as scientists and research experts and to aid in the development of the natural resources and the industries peculiar to every State and Territory of this great American Nation. It is easy for anyone who will give even casual consideration to this system of national organized research to appreciate that it will operate to vastly increase our national wealth and prosperity.

It will give employment to every citizen of every rank who honestly desires employment, and it will make our Nation independent of every other country in the world for raw products of every kind. We will never again be disturbed about the cutting off of our supplies of raw products from other countries after this engineering experiment station work has had time to swing into full-orbed operation.

AN IMPORTANT MEASURE OF NATIONAL PREPAREDNESS.

With such a system of engineering experiment stations in operation in this country 10 years before the World War, Germany never would have dared to defy us. As has been pointed out by many authorities, we learned most of our research from Germany and other foreign countries. Germany knew we had no such system of nationally encouraged research as she had and, thinking that industry in America was too selfish to render much assistance, Germany thought that when she declared war and withdrew her German scientists and research experts from American industries and universities that we would be helpless to combat her scientific and engineering warfare, and she came very near guessing correctly. It is perfectly proper to scrap a large part of our Navy and reduce our Army to a reasonably safe nucleus, but we must organize our scientific and industrial research and make this country preeminently superior to any other nation, and maintain such a supremacy as to make it perfectly ridiculous for any other country to ever undertake or dare to defy us, knowing that our great scientific, engineering, and industrial organizations for peaceful purposes can be easily applied to such terrific and horrible warfare as will make the thought of war with the United States impossible to any but an insane man or nation.

The World War could have been prevented with such a system of experiment stations, and enough men and money saved to operate the provisions of this bill for actual centuries.

COST OF THE WORLD WAR TO THE UNITED STATES.

When we were defied by Germany we had to undertake between two and three billions of dollars of frantic, scientific, and engineering research in order to combat Germany's scientific warfare. We lost more money in the operation of our railroads alone than would have been necessary to conduct these engineering experiment stations for two or three hundred years. Congress can no longer shut its eyes to the imperative need of such a system of national defense, which is fundamental and basic in its importance, and upon such a system will rest the success of our Army and Navy in future wars or controversies.

AN IMPORTANT EDUCATIONAL MEASURE.

The importance of this bill as an educational measure is incalculable, because our industries can not secure an adequate supply of young men and women trained for research and scientific work. The average technical training is not sufficient; but with these experiment stations in operation in every State young men and women having natural propensity for analytical work can satisfy their ambitions and become experts in solving mechanical, electrical, physical, and scientific problems relating to the natural resources and the industries of their respective States and other States. Such a supply of young men and women is of vital importance to the rapid and efficient development of the industries of the United States.

WILL AID OTHER PRACTICAL EXPERIMENT STATIONS.

It is well known and appreciated that upon engineers and scientists rests much of the development and progress of agriculture. Engineers provide transportation, sanitation, road-building machinery, refrigeration, drainage, communication, electric light and power, construction materials, mill equipment, chemical fertilizers, farm implements, and a great many other of the important elements that are necessary to the farmer in his work. Engineers have made possible the farmer's pleasure, comfort, and educational progress in many ways and in return recognize the great value of the work of the farmer and want to help his further progress and prosperity.

These engineering experiment stations will work in close cooperation with the agricultural experiment stations and therefore greatly contribute to the progress in farming, stock raising, and fruit growing throughout the United States. In fact, industry and agriculture will never reach their fullest development until these engineering experiment stations have been established in every State. This bill has been indorsed by Dr. S. W. Stratton, former Director of the Bureau of Standards of the Department of Commerce, and now head of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, the greatest technical school in the world. This great system of experiment stations in every State will be correlated and coordinated by the Bureau of Standards. It will be the means of extending the benefits of the Department of Commerce and other departments of the Government to every State and Territory, thereby utilizing to the maximum the work of the Federal Government; and, on the other hand, the Federal Government will collect annually a vast share of information from each of these experiment stations that will be of incalculable value to all of the various increasing departments of the Federal Government and to all research agencies or organizations of every kind. In the event of war all of the experiment stations will be placed at the service of the Federal Government, and it must be seen that with such assistance of trained men and equipment behind our Army and Navy and all of our departments, that the very creditable although expensive achievements of the present would be looked upon as very simple and would be eclipsed by the tremendous possibilities of accomplishment with each of these experiment stations, with its organization of brains and equipment, concentrated on the problems of either war or peace. It is hoped that Congress will pass this legislation shortly after it convenes next December, so that we will begin the year 1924 with this long delayed and vitally important system of engineering experiment stations which will do so much to promote universal peace in America and the world.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Speaker, the huge national debts, chiefly as the result of the late war, and which weigh so heavily on the backs of the peoples of all the civilized nations of the world, are matters of deep concern to the statesmen responsible for the government of the nations that were involved in that war. Our own national debt was increased from $1,000,000,000 to $26,000,000,000. The national debts of the world were increased from $43,000,000,000 in 1913 to over $400,000,000,000 in 1921. I made a speech on the subject of the national debts of the world on January 12, 1922, which can be found in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, on pages 1140, 1141, 1142, volume 62, Sixty-seventh Congress, second session. In that speech I set out tables showing the growth of the national debts of the world from 1688 to 1921 of about 100 leading colonies and nations of the world.

During the last few years the people of our own country have become much alarmed at the growth of tax-exempt securities which have been issued by the Nation, the several States, and the political subdivisions of the States. It is estimated that there are now about $34,000,000,000 of securities in this country wholly or partly exempt from taxation. It is conceded by all students of finance that these tax-exempt securities constitute a menace to our national welfare and prosperity. What shall we do about it?

During this session of Congress a resolution passed the House of Representatives by a vote of more than two-thirds proposing an amendment to the Constitution to permit the Nation and the respective States to tax such securities hereafter to be issued. This resolution failed in the Senate. If such a resolution should pass both the House and Senate by a two-thirds vote, as required by the Constitution, it is not at all certain that the necessary three-fourths of the State legislatures would ratify the same. The proposed amendment would not affect the securities now outstanding, and, in my opinion, would not be a very potent factor in preventing the States and the political subdivisions of the States from adding to their debt burdens in the future.

"The way to resume is to resume." Two steps are necessary to reduce the menace of tax-exempt securities: (1) It should be made more difficult by law to issue such securities; (2) it should be made mandatory on the tax-levying authorities to provide for a sinking fund to retire within a certain specified time all public debts now outstanding and those hereafter to be made.

Congress at the close of the war made provisions for the retirement of the national debt. Section 6, subdivision (a) of the Victory Liberty loan act, approved March 3, 1919, has the following sinking-fund provision:

(1) Two and one-half per cent of the aggregate amount of such bonds and notes outstanding on July 1, 1920, less an amount equal to the par amount of any obligations of foreign governments held by the United States on July 1, 1920; and (2) the interest which would have been payable during the fiscal year for which the appropriation is made on the bonds and notes purchased, redeemed, or paid out of the sinking fund during such year or in previous years.

The aggregate amount of bonds and notes outstanding on July 1, 1920, was $19,851,201,450. The par amount of the obligations of foreign governments held by the United States on July 1, 1920, was $9,445,600,855.18. The difference of $10,136,-194,594.82 is the amount to which the sinking-fund provision above quoted applies. According to experts in the Treasury Department this amount of a little over $10,000,000,000 will be entirely wiped out in 25 years from July 1, 1920. Other Liberty loan acts provide that the amounts paid to us by these foreign governments, either as interest or on principal, shall be used in retiring outstanding national bonds. At the time these various laws were enacted the national legislators went on the assumption that these foreign governments would take care of the interest as it became due and ultimately pay off the principal of what they owed us. Thus in 25 years from July 1, 1920, if the foreign governments would keep paid up the interest due us and ultimately discharge the principal of the debts they owe us our people would be entirely relieved from any burden of the national debt incurred during the late war.

Right here permit me to observe that the sinking-fund provision does not apply to any part of the floating debt, but only to that part of the national debt which had been funded into bonds and notes. It was assumed at the time that the floating debt would be retired within a few years.

Since these laws were enacted these foreign governments have not kept up their interest charges. Last year Great Britain paid us $100,000,000, which was only about a half of one year's interest due us. Our other principal foreign debtors have not paid us one penny of interest, and from present indications they will pay us nothing in the near future. It is problematical whether we will ever get anything from any of them, unless it be from Great Britain, which at present is the only hopeful exception.

Whether the foreign governments pay us or not, it is a duty which we owe to ourselves and to our posterity to make provision for retiring our entire national debt within a reasonable time. The adoption of such a policy will not prevent the National Government from pursuing any reasonable course to collect from our foreign debtors. If we make the sinking-fund provision apply to our entire national debt, whatever moneys are collected from our foreign debtors can be easily applied to the further reduction of our national debt, and if such collection is not made until our entire national debt is paid, the money from foreign debtors can be used for the reduction of our national taxes.

During this session of Congress I introduced a bill to amend subdivision (a) of section 6 of the Victory Liberty loan act enacted March 3, 1919, by striking out the following words: "Less an amount equal to the par amount of any obligations of foreign governments held by the United States on July 1, 1920." If these words are stricken from the law, then the sinking-fund provision will apply to all such bonds and notes outstanding on July 1, 1920. Owing to the pressure of business, my bill received no consideration during this session. As soon as the next Congress convenes I shall reintroduce this bill and press its consideration before the proper committee and on the floor of the House of Representatives. If this proposed legislation is enacted, we will get rid of the menace of national tax-exempt securities within 25 years.

A SUGGESTION TO STATE LEGISLATURES.

The menace of tax-exempt securities issued by the States and the political subdivisions of the States must be taken care of by State legislation. Every generation should pay the bonds it authorizes. If we keep up the reckless habit of voting and piling up public debts, the very security of our Government will be threatened. Every year the tax burdens are becoming more and more onerous, and the complaints of the people are becoming more and more ominous.

In passing, permit me to suggest legislation that should be enacted by every State legislature: (1) Legislation requiring more time for deliberation before an election on issuing bonds and possibly requiring more than a majority vote to authorize bonds for certain purposes; (2) legislation making provision for a sinking fund mandatory to pay off the principal of bonds issued with heavy penalties on the tax-levying authorities for failure to comply with the law making it mandatory to provide for a sinking fund. To secure legislation along the line indicated should receive the serious attention and consideration of every well-wisher of the Republic.

WEALTH AND DEBTS OF OUR DEBTORS.

Reverting to the problem of our own national debt and the possibility of our collecting from our foreign debtors, I wish to call your attention to the national wealth and the national debts of our leading debtors and the policies heretofore pursued by those debtors in paying their debts, or rather their failure to pay their debts. In the first place, I wish to call your attention to their national wealth and national debts. The countries to which I call your attention are France, Great Britain, Italy, and Belgium. The figures on national wealth are estimates furnished me by the Department of Commerce about a year ago. The figures on national debts were furnished me by O. P. Austin, formerly chief statistician of the Treasury Department and now statistician of the National City Bank of New York. These authorities are as reliable as can be found anywhere. In order that you may understand these figures more readily, I want you to keep in mind that our own national wealth is estimated at $250,000,000,000, and that our national debt is about $23,000,000,000. Our national debt is a little less than 10 per cent of our national wealth. At this place, I shall insert in the RECORD the figures of wealth and debts of the four countries to which I just referred:

Country.	Wealth (by Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce).	National debt (Austin).	Per cent.
France	$58,500,000,000	$51,000,000,000	87
Great Britain	70,500,000,000	37,910,000,000	53
Italy	21,800,000,000	18,650,000,000	85
Belgium	5,840,000,000	4,670,000,000	80

These figures show the debt of Great Britain is about 50 per cent of her national wealth. If our national debt were 50 per cent of our national wealth instead of 10 per cent, we each year would have to raise by taxation to pay the interest thereon the amount of over $5,000,000,000 instead of $1,000,000,000 as we do now. Our total national expenditures for all purposes, including interest on the national debt, sinking fund, and to run all departments of Government, for the last year were less than $4,000,000,000.

In the next place I wish to call your attention to some tables which I had prepared, showing the debt increases of these four countries. The first table shows the debts of Great Britain from 1688. The table showing the debt increases of France begins with 1815, after the Napoleonic era. The debts of Belgium begin with 1830, when the Government of Belgium was established; and the table for Italy begins with 1875, soon after the unification of that country under the present dynasty.

In a leading financial publication of Great Britain, to wit, Whitacre's Almanac for 1901, I find this significant statement: "Great Britain shares with the United States the feeling of duty almost alone among the nations of the world which leads these two countries to use every effort to redeem their national debts." This statement is absolutely true relative to our four principal debtors. It will be seen from the figures that I have before me, and which I shall place in the RECORD, that there has been at no time a decrease in the national indebtedness of either France, Belgium, or Italy. Right now France is floating a new loan of 1,400,000,000 francs to meet the running expenses of her Government. It will also be seen from the figures that I place in the RECORD in regard to the national indebtedness of Great Britain that there have been a few periods of debt reduction. Great Britain has had a national debt since 1688. The first debt decrease is recorded during the reign of George II. The second decrease was made following the Spanish war. The third decrease was made following the Napoleonic era. The fourth decrease was from 1857 to 1898, when the national debt was decreased over £200,000,000. From 1898 to the Boer war the national indebtedness of Great Britain was never reduced below £600,000,000. With the Boer war the national indebtedness went up to over £770,000,000. From the Boer war to the World War the national indebtedness of Great Britain was reduced less than £120,000,000. The World War greatly increased the national debt of Great Britain. Following the armistice the national debt continued to increase. At the end of the fiscal year 1920–21 the total debt of Great Britain was £7,831,774,300.

I have given these figures concerning the national wealth and national indebtedness of the four principal countries, as well as their debt increases covering a considerable period of time, for no other purpose than to present the facts. The people are entitled to these facts and from the facts to draw their own conclusions. These facts will assist us to adopt our own fiscal policy. There has been a disposition on the part of statesmen during and since the war to conceal the facts from the people. Such a course, according to my way of thinking, is never warranted either in war or in peace.

The issue before us is not whether our foreign debts should be canceled. The question is, How, if ever, are we going to collect? The financial condition of our debtors holds out very little hope that sufficient money will or can be collected from them to in any way reduce our national debt in any considerable degree or to relieve our own taxpayers. If anyone has any scheme that will enable us to collect from our debtors, he should waste no time in presenting it to the public, as the problem of collecting from our foreign debtors has to date baffled our ablest statesmen and financiers.

It is true that recently we had a debt settlement with Great Britain. According to the settlement Great Britain is given 62 years in which to pay $4,600,000,000 with interest. If she pays, according to the new contract, well and good, but I am unable to entertain any hope that even Great Britain will meet her obligations annually as provided in the settlement under the chaotic economic conditions which prevail in the world. In my judgment it is utterly useless and senseless in arranging our national Budget to entertain even an expectation that our foreign debtors will furnish us relief in payments on what they justly owe us.

With these facts before us I wish to submit to the Members of the House that we should proceed to legislate for the payment of our entire national debt. The sinking fund should be made applicable to the entire debt as suggested in my bill instead of to only part of the debt as is now the law. The outlook for the economic rehabilitation of Europe is anything but bright. Since the armistice we have received no payments from Europe except a small one to apply on interest from Great Britain. Up to date the other debtors have not even shown a disposition to discuss payments. Therefore if our Government intends to pay the entire principal of our national debt within a reasonable time the only course that presents itself is to make the sinking-fund provision apply to the entire national debt.

The National Government should set the example to the States and political subdivisions of the States in debt reduction. The way to reduce tax-exempt securities is to reduce the principal of such securities by application of the sinking-fund provision to the entire national debt. Tax-exempt securities are a very evident and pressing menace. The way to get rid of the menace is to pay them off and be mighty careful about authorizing the issuance of further tax-exempt securities.

The enactment of my bill will accomplish two very desirable results:

1. It will pay off the entire national debt within the next 25 years.

2. It will point the way to the States and political subdivisions of the States to make provision to retire their tax-exempt securities and to exercise in the future greater caution in issuing such securities.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
February 7, 1923.

Mr. RAMSEYER introduced the following bill; which was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means and ordered to be printed:

A bill (H. R. 14240) relating to the sinking fund for bonds and notes of the United States.

Be it enacted, etc., That subdivision (a) of section 6 of the Victory Liberty loan act is amended by striking out after the figures "1920," where the same appear the third time in said subdivision, the following words "less an amount equal to the par amount of any obligations of foreign governments held by the United States on July 1, 1920," so that said subdivision (a) of section 6 of the Victory Liberty loan act as amended will read as follows:

"SEC. 6. (a) That there is hereby created in the Treasury a cumulative sinking fund for the retirement of bonds and notes issued under the first Liberty bond act, the second Liberty bond act, the third Liberty bond act, the fourth Liberty bond act, or under this act, and outstanding on July 1, 1920. The sinking fund and all additions thereto are hereby appropriated for the payment of such bonds and notes at maturity, or for the redemption or purchase thereof before maturity by the Secretary of the Treasury at such prices and upon such terms and conditions as he shall prescribe, and shall be available until all such bonds and notes are retired. The average cost of the bonds and notes purchased shall not exceed par and accrued interest. Bonds and notes purchased, redeemed, or paid out of the sinking fund shall be canceled and retired and shall not be reissued. For the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1920, and for each fiscal year thereafter, until all such bonds and notes are retired, there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purposes of such sinking fund, an amount equal to the sum of (1) 2½ per cent of the aggregate amount of such bonds and notes outstanding on July 1, 1920, and (2) the interest which would have been payable during the fiscal year for which the appropriation is made on the bonds and notes purchased, redeemed, or paid out of the sinking fund during such year or in previous years.

"The Secretary of the Treasury shall submit to Congress at the beginning of each regular session a separate annual report of the action taken under the authority contained in this section."

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, February 24, 1923, President Harding delivered a special message to the Senate in which he said:

There has been established at The Hague a permanent court of international justice for the trial and decision of international causes by judicial methods, now effective through the ratification by the signatory powers of a special protocol. It is organized and functioning.

The President called attention to the fact that the United States has for many years advocated the creation of such an agency of peace, and added:

It is for this reason that I am now asking for the consent of the Senate to our adhesion to the protocol.

A letter from the Secretary of State accompanied the President's message, in which is presented the history of the establishment of the court, discusses the objection to our adherence because of the court's establishment under the auspices of the League of Nations, and explains how, with certain reservations, the United States may adhere and participate and remain wholly free from any legal relation to the league and free from any obligation created by the league.

Mr. Hughes in his letter proposes four reservations:

1. That adhesion shall not involve the United States in any legal relation to the league;

2. That the United States shall participate in the selection of the judges of the court;

3. That the United States shall pay a fair share of the expenses of the court as determined by the Congress of the United States; and

4. That the statute for the Permanent Court of International Justice shall not be amended without the consent of the United States.

THE UNITED STATES HAS ALWAYS FAVORED WORLD COURT.

The statement of the President that the United States had for many years advocated the creation of such a court as is now established is fully borne out by the facts.

From the first the Government of the United States has advocated and promoted the settlement of international disputes by peaceful means. The means proposed and used for many years was by voluntary arbitration. Up to the time of the first Hague conference in 1899 the United States had participated in 57 arbitrations. Congress adopted a resolution in 1890 requesting the President to invite other governments to confer "to the end that any differences or disputes arising between two governments which can not be adjusted by diplomatic agency may be referred to arbitration and be peacefully adjusted by such means." Secretary Hay in his instructions to the delegates of the United States to the first Hague conference said:

Nothing can secure for human government and for the authority of law which it represents so deep a respect and so firm a loyalty as the spectacle of sovereign and independent States, whose duty it is to prescribe the rules of justice and impose penalties upon the lawless, bowing with reverence before the august supremacy of those principles of right which give law its eternal foundation.

At that conference a permanent court of arbitration was provided which still is in existence and to which 17 controversies have been submitted and decided.

In 1908 and 1909 the United States concluded 19 general treaties of arbitration.

Not only has the United States uniformly favored arbitration in its own case and supported the permanent court of arbitration, but it has from the first favored the establishment of a permanent court of international justice. In his instructions to the delegates of the United States to the second Hague conference, in 1907, Secretary Root strongly urged our delegates to support the establishment of such a tribunal. He said:

> It should be your effort to bring about in the second conference a development of The Hague tribunal into a permanent tribunal composed of judges who are judicial officers and nothing else; who are paid adequate salaries; who have no other occupation, and who will devote their entire time to the trial and decision of international causes by judicial methods and under a sense of judicial responsibility.

The second Hague conference developed a plan for such a court, but agreement failed as to the method of selecting judges.

The covenant of the League of Nations provided for the preparation and submission of plans for the establishment of a permanent court of international justice. An advisory committee of distinguished jurists was appointed which sat at The Hague in 1920 and formulated a plan for the establishment of such a court. Hon. Elihu Root was a member of that committee. The plan recommended was adopted by the council and assembly of the league and an independent statute constituting the court was submitted to the nations for adoption. Fifty-one nations have adopted the protocol.

CONSTITUTION OF THE COURT.

Secretary Hughes thus summarizes the provisions of the statute:

> The statute of the court provides for the selection of the judges; defines their qualifications; and prescribes the jurisdiction of the court and the procedure to be followed in litigation before it. The court consists of 15 members—11 judges called "ordinary judges," and 4 deputy judges. The 11 judges constitute the full court. In case they can not all be present, deputies are to sit as judges in place of the absentees; but if 11 judges can not be present, 9 may constitute a quorum. The judges are elected for nine years, and are eligible for reelection. The jurisdiction of the court comprises all cases which the parties refer to it, and all the matters especially provided for in treaties and conventions in force.
> Jurisdiction is not compulsory, but is conferred only by the agreement of the parties to the controversy.

The statute expressly provides that the court shall be open not only to members of the league but to all States mentioned in the annex to the covenant. This includes the United States. None of the provisions of the statute constituting the court are dependent upon the league except the selection of the judges. As Secretary Hughes says: "It is an establishment separate from the league, having a distinct legal status resting upon the protocol and statute. It is organized and acts in accordance with judicial standards, and its decisions are not controlled or subject to review by the League of Nations."

The court was organized January 30, 1922. Its first session lasted until March 24. The most important task at the first session was the drafting of rules of procedure. The second session was begun June 15, 1922. Three requests for advisory opinions were presented to the court. Fifty meetings of the court were held during this session, 15 of which were public. The third session was begun January 9, 1923. The establishment of the court has been almost universally approved. Adverse criticism has been rare. In America the comment has been especially favorable. Dean Wigmore said: "It should have given to every lawyer a thrill of cosmic vibration." Dr. James Brown Scott rejoiced that "one dream of the ages has been realized in our time." American gratification has been increased by the selection of one of the most distinguished jurists of the United States, John Bassett Moore, as one of the judges.

OBJECTIONS CONSIDERED.

Of course objections have been made. It is urged that we should not establish an international court to interpret and apply international law until there is established a system or code of international law.

There is available, however, a large body of international law to aid and direct the court in the decision of cases which may come before it. In the first place, every treaty between nations is international law and binding as to the parties to such treaty. The court will interpret a treaty in case of disagreement as to its provisions between the contracting parties. When the large number of treaties covering almost every possible phase of international relations is considered it will be realized how important and necessary it is that a court should be established to interpret and settle differences regarding them.

International law as stated and agreed to by many nations at the two Hague conferences has still many conventions not broken nor contested.

The works of the great writers on international law are a source of unwritten but admitted international law always appealed to and of great weight in the settlement of controversies between nations.

The decisions of courts of last resort of the great nations, especially of the courts of Great Britain and the Supreme Court of the United States, are drawn upon for principles and applications of international law. The decisions of the Permament Court of International Justice itself will furnish a body of precedents which may be applied in subsequent cases.

INTERNATIONAL LAWMAKING.

But a still more important consideration in this regard is the proposed revision and codification of international law. It is admitted by all those conversant with international affairs that a conference should be called soon to review the condition of international law, to formulate and codify as far as possible the principles and rules thereof, and to provide for further periodic conferences for that purpose. The work accomplished at the two Hague conferences of 1899 and 1907 was promising, and provision was made for a third conference, which was to meet in 1914 or 1915. This proposed conference was prevented by the war. After the war American jurists agreed that as soon as possible a new conference should be called to restate the established rules of international law, especially in the fields affected by the events of the war. As Mr. Root expressed it, proceedings should be had to find out and declare—> what there is left of international law; what is broken beyond repair and what remains; what is to be treated as a rule which has been violated, but which stands, just as the law against murder and theft stands, even though people commit murder and theft; and what rules, if any, have been so smashed that they do not exist any longer.

The proposed conference should formulate and agree upon amendments and additions necessary or useful to meet the changes in the conditions of international life and intercourse which have followed the war. The conference should also consider the subjects not now adequately regulated by international law, but as to which the interests of international justice require that rules of law should be declared and accepted.

The President of the United States will be requested to call such a conference in the near future, to which other nations shall be invited to send delegates to consider and formulate for submission to their respective nations such rules of international law as the conference shall agree upon. These rules when adopted will constitute a body of international law which will be to the new court what our statutory law is to our courts. That this will be a great advance in the progress and development of peaceful settlement of international disputes can not be doubted. In that advance the United States should not only bear a part but should lead and exert all its great prestige and dominating influence toward its early accomplishment.

It is stated that by giving our adherence and support to the court as now established we shall become a party to the League of Nations, which we have hitherto refused to enter. This, as I have stated, is expressly disclaimed by Secretary Hughes. Practically the only essential by which the league is connected with the court is in the present provisions for the selection of judges. These provisions will be modified if the reservations which Secretary Hughes proposes are accepted. Besides, the Secretary in his proposed reservations in the most explicit language provides that our adhesion to the court shall not be taken as involving us in the league. The reservation, without the adoption of which it is not proposed the United States shall become a party to the court protocol, is as follows:

> That such adhesion shall not be taken to involve any legal relation on the part of the United States to the League of Nations, or the assumption of any obligation by the United States under the covenant of the League of Nations, constituting part 1 of the treaty of Versailles.

This is a sufficient answer to any reasonable objection urged on that ground.

The statement that the United States by adhering to the court is trying to enter the league by the "back door" does not merit attention. Neither does denunciation by the extreme antagonists of the league who assert that the United States should have nothing to do with anything connected with or approved by the league need consideration. The United States must and will not be influenced in a matter of such grave importance by such childish and unreasonable objections. If the court proposal originated with the league and would better conditions affecting the relations of the nations, the United States should give it unquestioned approval. But in this case it is the proposal of the United States which the league adopts. To now refuse to cooperate in the establishment and maintenance of a court which the United States has in so many ways approved and which seems almost universally desired and approved by the people would be unthinkable..

Without delay, as soon as sufficient consideration to the conditions of adherence can be given, the United States should give full and effective sanction and support to the Permanent Court of International Justice now established at The Hague. Such action on our part will only be another evidence of the earnest and heartfelt desire of the American people to do all that government and human power can do to substitute for the horrors and burdens of war the peaceful settlement of disputes between the nations of the earth.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, simply in the interest of historical accuracy I want to discuss the subject referred to this morning, when it was stated that the President's suggestion to stop the issuance of nontaxable securities would not interfere with the further issuance of nontaxable bonds by the farm-loan system. That statement was made by two or three gentlemen who mentioned the question. I know of no way of determining what the President had in his mind better than to read the message which he delivered a few days ago in connection with the message which he delivered last year. In the message the other day he said:

> One year ago I suggested the submission of an amendment so that we may lawfully restrict the issuance of tax-exempt securities.

There is no doubt that at the present time the Congress has the power to tax the Federal farm-loan bonds or to leave them untaxed, but no State has power to tax them. So far the Congress has seen fit to leave them untaxed. In other words, the borrowers under the Federal farm-loan system have the privilege of borrowing their money from sources that are not taxed and of thus securing a very cheap rate of interest. There is no doubt that if an amendment were adopted to the Constitution forbidding the issuance hereafter of tax-exempt securities it would forever end the right of the Federal farm-loan system to issue tax-exempt securities. And that both the States and the National Government might tax incomes derived from bonds issued after the passage of the amendment.

What did the President say one year ago in his message to Congress on December 6, 1921?

> I think our tax problems, the tendency of wealth to seek nontaxable investment, and the menacing increase of public debt, Federal, State, and municipal, all justify a proposal to change the Constitution so as to end the issue of nontaxable bonds.

He does not say to end the issue except in the case of farm-loan bonds, or except in any other case, but the President in his message says that he favors an amendment to the Constitution which would forever end the issuance hereafter of nontaxable bonds.

He goes on to say that, of course, we can not affect those already issued, but we can those for the future. The President may have changed his mind since that time, but undoubtedly he had in mind at the time he wrote the message and penned this document that we should end all tax-exempt securities for the future; and if that were done there is not any question that the men who buy bonds would take into consideration not only such taxes as are then being levied on similar bonds but a disposition which they might fear in the future the States or any of the States or Federal Government might have to make as an additional levy on such bonds, because if we once open the bonds to taxation then at any time the amount of that tax could be changed. Hence, if there seemed a likelihood of a tax of 1 per cent, in all probability the bond purchaser would increase the rate 2 per cent in order to be sure that he had raised his interest rates enough to take care of the tax.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of Texas. Yes.

Mr. EVANS. Does the gentleman mean to infer that the Constitution of the United States contains any inhibition against tax-free securities issued under Federal authority?

Mr. JONES of Texas. Absolutely not; but I do mean to say that the President of the United States asks that the Constitution be amended so that they may be taxable, and that they shall be taxable, and that there shall be no tax-exempt securities hereafter issued. Would not that include the Federal farm loan system?

Mr. EVANS. And that the inhibition in the Constitution refers only to securities issued by authority of the State?

Mr. JONES of Texas. Oh, no. In his message he refers to the menacing increase of public debt—Federal, State, and municipal—and states that it all justifies a proposal to change the constitutions to end the issue of nontaxable bonds. That means all nontaxable bonds—bonds of every description—and if the English language means anything that is what it means.

Mr. EVANS. I think the gentleman misunderstood me. What I said was that the inhibition in the Federal Constitution refers to only securities issued under State authority.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I beg the gentleman's pardon; I may not have understood him, but the gentleman will agree with me that if the President's message where he went into the matter in detail a year ago means anything it means every bond issue by the Federal farm loan system thereafter would be subject to taxation by both the State and the Federal Government. Is not that the fact?

Mr. EVANS. I do not think it is, taking into consideration with what the President was discussing, namely, the Constitution and its effect.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I think the gentleman is determined not to be convinced. The President says:

> I think our tax problems, the tendency of wealth to seek nontaxable investments, and the menacing increase of public debt, Federal, State, and municipal, all justify a proposal to change the Constitution so as to end the issue of nontaxable bonds.

That is, the Federal Government issue, the State issue, the municipal issue, the district issue, all justify the proposal to change the Constitution regardless of what it may now mean so as to end the issue of nontaxable bonds for the future. I do not see how any other conclusion can be reached. His language includes all bonds, whether Federal, State, or municipal. He may have changed his mind, he may have seen a new light, new conditions that pertain to it, and he may want to change his expression of a year ago, but if he carries out his original idea there is no other conclusion one can reach, and I may add that if the amendment proposed by Mr. GREEN of Iowa should be adopted it would permit both the State and Federal Governments to tax these farm-loan bonds.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of Texas. I will.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Do I understand the gentleman from Texas to take the position that these Federal farm-loan bonds should not be included in the provision of the proposed amendment?

Mr. JONES of Texas. I am not discussing the general merits of the amendment. I doubt whether the amendment, at least in its proposed form, should be adopted, but if adopted there is certainly much force to the argument that farm-loan bonds should be exempted, at least for a period of years, until the farm-loan system has gotten thoroughly on its feet, because there is no doubt that whereas the farmer now gets money at 5½ per cent, if an amendment to the Constitution permitting the States and Federal Government to tax those bonds is adopted, the men who hold the purse strings and who buy the bonds will say, "I am going to be protected in the purchase and I will increase my rate of interest to a degree that will surely protect me from any levies of taxation, whether by the State or by the United States." However, my purpose in arising was to answer the statement made by the gentleman from Iowa and others to the effect that the proposed amendment did not mean that all farm-loan bonds thereafter issued would be subject to taxation. Now, this means more than the simple question of a refuge for investment in tax-exempt securities. The big, congested centers have already issued many bonds. These bonds are forever tax free, regardless of any amendment. The Liberty bonds and the Victory bonds are forever tax free, regardless of whether an amendment is adopted. I say, let us proceed cautiously. The United States Government will not probably issue any great amount of additional bonds for many years. The securities that you would make subject to taxation will in many instances be those from school districts in settlements where they desire to enable the boys and girls to go to school. In order to build a schoolhouse, they will desire to issue bonds. They now get rates of from 4 to 4½ per cent, and they sell the bonds sometimes at a premium. If you make them subject to taxation they will have to pay 6 and 6½ per cent in these developing sections. They are the people who will pay the taxes. The same is true of roads and municipal improvements in the outlying sections of this broad, big country. Let us not be deceived. The bondholder will see to it that the borrower pays the taxes. Therefore, let us carefully study this question before acting.

Already this country has billions in outstanding bonds which must remain tax free. Is there not danger that such a step just at the present time might still further penalize by higher rates of interest the undeveloped sections of this country, whose interest rates are already too high? [Applause.] This is a matter of great importance.

There has been a great deal of propaganda in favor of the amendment. It is a tremendous and far-reaching question, and one that should engage the best thought and attention of the country before final action is had. Much has been said in the press and on the floor for the amendment; and what I have said are some of the things that it seems to me should also be taken into consideration before we take this all-important step. Under the amendment as drafted New York, for instance, could tax incomes from State, county, municipal, and school bonds issued in other States and sold in New York 50 per cent, and tax the income from her own industrial bonds only 10 per cent, and thus destroy the market for the bonds of other States.

If this amendment were so drawn as to require taxes on all bonds and securities to be the same, an entirely different question would be presented. But in its present form New York, which furnishes the market for a great many bonds, could tax the incomes from Federal farm-loan bonds 50 per cent and tax industrial and railway bonds only 10 per cent. Thus New York could practically destroy the market for these bonds, as well as for school, municipal, and other bonds from other States by causing the interest on those bonds to go so high as to be prohibitive, while she could very much favor her own industrial bonds. Such a condition would be unbearable.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, recent developments remind us that once every year when this appropriation bill comes up for consideration the House is regaled with divers attacks upon the measure, flanked by charges of utter failure of the Indian Bureau. Thinking this an opportune time to refute by a plain statement of the facts some of the numerous unfounded assertions made regarding Indian matters, I have secured from the Indian Bureau certain data in connection with the matter which I desire to present to the House for its information.

Much criticism has been offered because the annual expenditures of the Indian Bureau exceed those of some other branches of the Government's activities. A comparison of the cost of the Indian Service with that of other bureaus is of no logical weight, if it goes no further than placing side by side the totals appropriated for each one. Figures flourished in this fashion may deceive and excite the superficial mind, but they mean little to the fact finder. The volume of the work performed, the character of the service rendered, the conditions dealt with, and the obstacles to be overcome are fundamental in any such comparative analysis, and without going into these inherent essentials no good can come from such limping argument, but actual evil may follow.

Effort has been made to picture 5,000 employees as supervising 50,000 Indian families, or one bureau official to every 10 families. The sophistry of such misapplied averages will appear to anyone having only a partial knowledge of the grouping and assignment of the Indian Service necessary to its extensive educational system, where scores of employees are sometimes required for a single school, and to its health, agricultural, reclamation, forestry, and other large activities spreading over vast territorial areas.

Bureau officials have been described as brutally throwing Indians into jail without the privilege of jury or evidence, of governing according to their whims and perpetuating a system of abject Indian slavery. It has been said that Indians are possessors of great wealth but are starving for lack of the necessaries of life. Attempt is made to win sympathy for the Indian by an extraordinary application of the doctrine that all men are created equal, and by heaping condemnation upon administrative agents because they do not recognize tribes as self-determining bodies and follow implicitly the voice of their councils. The relation of guardianship established by Congress and the courts is apparently ignored. The Indian Bureau administers this guardianship over the property of noncitizen and incompetent Indians as authorized and required to do. It does it with helpful and equitable purpose, although with occasional errors of judgment alien to no human wisdom. To shake the rafters with censure of the Indian Bureau in terms of "Kaisers" and "Czars" and denounce it as a despot out of date is about so much rhetorical claptrap to tickle the ears of disappointed grafters and hungry schemers in search of opportunity to fleece the Indian out of the last acre of his homestead and the last penny in his pocket. In the face of ascertained facts such statements must be set down as exaggerations. Apart from the Christian church, the American Red Cross, and like benevolent agencies, there is probably not anywhere an organization that functions with more humane, persuasive, and uplifting spirit than the Indian Service, and whoever pictures it as a bureaucracy moved by sordid selfishness can hardly be recognized as truly picturing that organization to well-informed and fair-minded people.

It may be safely said that the Indian Bureau and its present commissioner are ready to challenge the most searching investigation—if it be an impartial one—to show whether the personnel of the Indian Service is less industrious, less honest, less efficient, or less devoted to a noble, far-reaching, and difficult work than that of any other governmental bureau, and whether their average compensation is not the lowest of any like body of civil-service employees.

By a mixture of unverified assertion, ridicule, and inunendo the Indian Bureau has been held responsible for early transactions and legislation with which it had nothing to do and is branded as a worse failure than the old Freedmen's Bureau, which dealt with conditions almost wholly dissimilar.

The unsuccessful outcome of the tribal herd enterprise on the Blackfeet Reservation is admitted by the bureau, but prejudiced criticism adroitly obscures the fact that the failure of grazing from drought and the impossibility of procuring cars in the proper shipping season were the chief causes, and that white stockmen in that region experienced similar losses, and in some cases worse. The bureau has been unfortunate in occasional investments, just as private individuals everywhere have been, but this has not been the rule. The Blackfeet situation has become the favorite subject for doleful description by the whole body of calamity howlers and has been depicted as vastly worse than the facts would corroborate. With all the stories of starvation on that reservation, the evidence of such deaths is not easily found. The population of this tribe is greater by several hundred than it was 10 years ago, and no tribe has made better progress in the last two years. Crop production has greatly increased and every prospect is encouraging. Among many favorable reports by those outside the Indian Service is that of General Scott, of the Board of Indian Commissioners, a courageous but conscientious critic, who says:

> I have been going about all over the Blackfeet country at the request of the superintendent, and in his company, and I think it will please you to know the results he is accomplishing.
> He is a man of great sympathy for the Indian, of untiring energy, firm and wise in his management. I see a vast difference everywhere since my last visit.
> Everywhere we see crops, from 5 to 12 acres of wheat and oats; 3 or 4 of potatoes, with garden produce. The flour and sawmills are in operation. The Indians show their crops with the greatest pride and joy. Mr. Campbell, the superintendent, goes about among them for days at a time, into every field, instructing and encouraging the owners. His system of organizing them into chapters in each section is bringing great results. They love and respect him highly, and he is gaining over the malcontents common to every agency who must join with him or be left behind by their own people.

The complaint about the Blackfeet irrigation project is a grossly misleading one. It is true that irrigation on that reservation has been disappointing to some extent, but the experiment is not yet closed, and as the Indians become better acquainted with irrigating methods the advantages of this development will be manifested. Whatever may be now conceded as to that unit, the reclamation work of the bureau has been as a whole unquestionably successful, and the indisputable facts will show that the crop and grazing returns for a single average year throughout the Indian country absolutely justify the aggregate expenditure. To denounce general results and large achievements because of some particular mistake or partial failure is a process of reasoning unworthy of serious reply.

In the minds of chronic knockers anything that has been done for the Indians and the progress they have made counts for naught, compared with the money expended to accomplish such results. The largest item in Indian legislation is for education, and the largest part of the service for which salaries are provided is for education. The civilization of the Indian is simply a matter of education, academic but no less industrial education, such as the Government through the Indian Bureau conducts creditably and at less cost than it is furnished by the States.

Facts of public record show that the expenditures per pupil in the public schools of 12 leading cities, including Washington, D. C., for the year 1919–20 ran from $74.57 to $103.74, seven of them being over $80, and this outlay presumably covered nothing in the way of clothing, subsistence, and medical service as supplied in Indian boarding schools, and comparatively little for vocational training. Upon the average expenditure of the 12 schools referred to, which was $85.64 per pupil, it appears that the instruction usually furnished in the municipal public schools costs more than double the same kind given in the Government boarding schools.

But a truer basis of comparison is between the Indian schools, which are industrial institutions in every sense, and similar State industrial schools. For 1920–21 the per capita cost of the girls' industrial school in Oregon was $428, and of the boys' school $390. For 1919–20 the per capita cost in the industrial schools of Nebraska was $425 for girls and $380 for boys. In Montana this cost has run as high as $1,676; in Arizona up to $555; and in Minnesota the per capita cost for boys was $537, and $600 for the same two years that the Government Indian school at Lawrence, Kans., was maintained at a per capita cost of $195 and $203, respectively. From whatever angle this question of cost is analyzed the showing is economically and educationally favorable to the administration of the Indian Bureau. Violent exception is taken to the practice of having students work at the trades in which they are taught for the purpose of aiding in the repairs of plants and in new construction, and this is termed "involuntary servitude" and a lowering of self-respect. Is it slavery for any healthy boy, Indian or white, to earn his board and clothes as soon as he is old enough? Is it a blight upon self-respect to train any boy of any race to work for his living? Let us hear in this connection something from the latest official comment of the Board of Indian Commissioners, a body of high-minded men who give much time to practical contact with Indian conditions and inspect and check over the Indian Bureau's operations and offer their recommendations thereon. This board says:

> The present policy of the Indian Office is to emphasize the human equation of the Indian problem. Its educational program, which centers in its purpose to place in some school every Indian child who can go to school; its plan to reach the women of the tribes by strengthening the field matron service; its aim to give Indians more hospital facilities and better medical attention; and its success in securing cooperation of organizations, such as the Red Cross, in advancing the welfare of the Government's wards not only are highly commendable as humanitarian activities but also are meeting a condition which contains elements of peril to a people passing through a very critical period.
> The accelerated progress made by the Indians which we have noted is due to several causes, but the Indian Service school unquestionably is the principal source of the modernizing energy which is hastening the advancement of our red friends. The education of their children is profoundly affecting the whole Indian people. The Indian Service and the mission schools are doing more than all else to weaken old-time tribal influence, to develop character, and make it easier to lead Indians to accept the white man's ways of living.

The position taken in recent criticism on the floor of the House of Representatives may be summed up in the following:

> (1) It is time to give the Indian the property to which he is entitled and then let him shift for himself.
> (2) Every reservation should be allotted to the Indians so that each may have his individual homestead. The tribal property should be divided. Minors and incompetents should be treated exactly as are similar persons of the white race—their property administered in the courts of the States.
> (3) There should be arrangements for a final accounting by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs at a certain fixed date. Each Indian tribe should be permitted to act through its freely elected council and a final settlement made, so that in all the future these original Americans shall be members of America.

In support of this policy views have been quoted from Major McLaughlin's interesting book published in 1910, but with such lack of accuracy as will appear from the following letter:

> MY DEAR MR. COMMISSIONER: In the speech of Hon. M. CLYDE KELLY in the House of Representatives on Wednesday, December 27, 1922, he quotes a few excerpts from the last chapter of the book entitled "My Friend the Indian," of which I am the author; and still substantially adhering to my views on the Indian question as therein expressed by me, I desire to invite attention to the omission of an important clause in the last paragraph of said book, as quoted by Mr. KELLY in his speech above referred to, wherein he quotes said paragraph only in part and omits a very essential qualifying clause.
> The exact wording of the paragraph from which this excerpt by Mr. KELLY is quoted is as follows, the underscored part having been omitted in his speech:
> "To me the question admits of but one answer. Give the people the money they have coming; give it to them as soon as possible. So soon as the proper official declares that an Indian is competent to administer his own affairs, let that Indian have his portion of the fund, also a patent in fee for his allotment, and let him shift for himself. This procedure would relieve the Government of the care of these funds and build up manhood and individual self-reliance, which can never be realized under the present doling-out process. Do away with the leading-strings and check-reins by which the Indian is now so handicapped, and he will immediately feel the necessity for demonstrating his capacity to manage his own estate. By this means only can the Indian be saved from chronic indigence and ultimate and absolute paupery; and I am sufficiently well acquainted with Indian nature to venture the prophecy that a large majority of those under fifty years of age will develop the capacity to hustle for themselves exactly in the proportion that their needs press them. Take away his annuity by letting him handle the principal, and the Indian will be given a start on the road to complete civilization and independence, that will land him at the desired goal in nine cases out of ten."
> The foregoing was my view of this particular phase of the Indian question when I wrote said book 13 years ago, and I still adhere to the essential features thereof as therein expressed, except that from subsequent experience I have somewhat modified my view as to the issue of patents in fee to the entire allotment of the average Indian of the present day; and while I still believe in the removal of restrictions and turning the Indian loose as soon as consistently possible, I believe that at least 40 acres of the Indian's allotment upon which he makes his home should remain restricted during the life of the allottee, except where the allottee was declared by the proper official to be unquestionably qualified to administer his business affairs equal to the ordinary white pioneer farmer.
> Respectfully, JAMES MCLAUGHLIN.
> Hon. CHAS. H. BURKE,
> Commissioner of Indian Affairs, Washington, D. C.

It will be seen that the deleted part of the closing paragraph in the major's book, read in connection with his view as modified from later experience, leaves him in practical accord with the existing policy of the Indian Bureau. That policy is and has been to give to Indians found to be as competent as the average white man to manage their own business affairs the full control of their property, individual and tribal, and there is a bill now pending, initiated by the Indian Bureau, which if passed would authorize a valuation on the tribal property of each reservation and the payment of the pro rata share of such valuation to each competent applicant, thereby separating him from further participation in tribal affairs and permitting him to shift for himself as any other citizen. But to give the large number of Indians still incompetent entire control of their individual and tribal property would be hardly less than a national crime and will not be sanely considered. To turn over in fee to nearly 200,000 restricted Indians all their property interests would pauperize 90 per cent of them, burden the States with additional poorhouses, and visit upon Congress the just wrath of an enlightened electorate. Under the so-called "declaration of policy" of a few years ago, giving fee patents to allottees of one-half or less of Indian blood without other evidence of competency, enough has been demonstrated to prove the injustice to the Indians themselves of their wholesale release from guardianship. Reports from various reservations show that very few such patentees under that policy have been able to protect themselves against the wiles of their shrewd neighbors and the chicanery of "land sharks." The White Earth Reservation, Minn., is an instance of the dangerous "turning-loose" policy, where under the law the lands of adult mixed bloods could be sold without governmental supervision, and where probably not more than 10 per cent of the allottees now own the lands allotted to them, the same having been acquired by the whites at grossly inadequate considerations and under circumstances little short of criminal operations. Similar conditions can be found on the Turtle Mountains, the Yankton, the Winnebago Reservations, and others, where individual examples can be gathered by the thousands of Indians who have received fee patents to their land, have parted with practically all of their possessions, and are pathetic objects of charity.

Chairman Vaux, of the Board of Indian Commissioners, whose attentive study of actual conditions deserves great respect, says of the Oneidas in Wisconsin:

> The releasing of some of these Indians from all Government protection has been premature, and serious injustice has undoubtedly been done to a number who were not competent enough to handle their own business affairs. From a study of the experiences of these people it seems wise to go slow in forcing many Indians into independent citizenship before they are able to take care of themselves without outside assistance, irrespective of the degree of blood and educational qualifications, otherwise they may become paupers and charges on the community. The whole endeavor to force "competency" upon Indians too rapidly is believed to be a mistake. At Oneida, as well as other places, Indians were granted fee patents under the department's "declaration of policy," promulgated several years ago, which laid down some rather radical principles respecting competency when they were not really prepared for the responsibilities entailed by such action. This forcing of competency was undoubtedly not in the minds of the men who drew the "severalty act" of 1887.

The same practical observer, commenting on the Sisseton Agency, S. Dak., says:

> Under the "declaration of policy" of 1917 practically all adult Indians of one-half blood or less were granted fee patents regardless of whether the individuals were competent or not, resulting in about 10 per cent making good use of their lands and the others suffering hardship after they had disposed of their property. Even of the very small number who still hold their patented land only a few of these actually make use of their property themselves.

In the face of such unbiased opinion can there be any question about the need of a conservative check against placing the whole mass of the Indian population upon their own responsibility, with most of them in helpless ignorance of how to resist the greed and graft of tricksters who are ready to swarm in their midst and despoil them of every privilege or possession that is rightfully theirs?

This "shift for himself" policy would entail other extreme misfortunes to the Indian. The present plan of enrolling Indian children in the public schools encounters stubborn opposition by local school boards in many localities, and this prejudice does not readily yield to the citizenized Indian. Besides, there are many isolated districts where there are no public schools, so that in such circumstances thousands of Indian children would be wholly deprived of school advantages. But a more dreadful probability arises in the sudden cessation of all Federal educational effort represented by the splendid boarding schools now in operation, where from 20,000 to 25,000 Indian boys and girls are trained in mind and body and spiritual aspiration for the tests and obligations that await them in a civilization where every man and woman must win success by individual ambition and industry. The product of these schools is the remaking of the Indian race. It is, more than any other factor, the virtue and the virility of the Indian generations to come, and to shatter these great potencies of progress would be a sign of intellectual and moral decadence that the American brain and heart will never approve.

Moreover, this "shifting for himself" would withdraw medical aid from the Indian and his family in thousands of instances throughout the West, because of their distance from the practice fields of regular physicians, and would leave them wholly dependent upon the crude and dangerous arts of the native medicine men. It would drive from Indian homes the faithful field matron and nurse whose kind Samaritanism and skill are a widespread blessing to the sick and a patient guidance to the happiness of hygienic living. There could not fail to be a deplorable backset to education, health, and domestic elevation of Indian life under the operation of this radical theory to "turn the Indians loose."

It sounds well to argue that "every reservation should be allotted to the Indians so that each may have his individual homestead," but it is another matter to fit the theory to the facts. The Indian Bureau is confronted by conditions it did not create. There are populous reservations in the Southwest of vast domain, but of semiarid character, where until water development can be further extended community and itinerant life is almost a necessity, and where in many instances a homestead allotment would have to be from 10 to 50 miles long to enable the owner to reach water within its boundaries. There are other physical characteristics in the way that could be mentioned. Identical conditions are found on no two reservations. To fit a blanket proposition to all parts of the Indian country and hope for successful and uniform results is a preposterous suggestion that may be summarily dismissed.

Wherever allotments are practicable the Indian Bureau has made and will make them as fast as possible. It may not be generally known, or even to some statesmen, that about 200,000 Indians have already received allotments totaling approximately 40,000,000 acres, and that of the 125,000 who remain to be allotted approximately one-half are in regions that will not admit of immediate allotment. Practically two-thirds of the Indians are now citizens, and more than half of that number have full control of their property and are no longer wards of the Government.

The administration of the property of incompetents and minors in the State courts, as proposed, would not only spread confusion and consternation among the Indians but in most cases would mean the absorption by local lawyers of the Indian's property. One of the best laws ever enacted was that of June 25, 1910, giving the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs authority to determine the heirs of deceased Indians and to approve or disapprove Indian wills. During the past seven years approximately 35,000 estates of Indians have been probated by the United States Government at an average cost of $26 per estate. Place these Indian estates in the State courts and see what would happen. The chances are each estate would be contested; appeals would be carried on to the highest court; expenses would finally result in the sale of the property to pay the costs of litigation, and the entire estate would probably be frittered away in unnecessary legal procedure.

No "certain fixed date" can be set for a final accounting with Indian tribes. By the very nature of the Indian people and the status of their enormous tribal property this is impracticable. A number of the tribal rolls have been finally closed for the disbursement or segregation of the tribal trust funds, and the moneys have been paid out to the Indians. Other rolls are in process of being closed, and the Indians are encouraged to take upon themselves the status of citizens and to assume full control of their property as soon as they are deemed to be competent. But, with some exceptions, the Indian character is not the same as the white man's. His use of a limitless domain for ages left undeveloped that instinct prominent in the Caucasian for individual assertion and acquirement, that personal propensity to "hustle" for himself.

The white man quickly detects this difference and too often his moral standards do not check him from taking advantage of it, but permit his commercial shrewdness to dangle gilded playthings before the eyes of the Indian as a barter for his possessions of permanent value. If white men in the vicinity of reservations felt an altruistic interest in the Indian superior to their covetousness for his property, the efforts of the Indian Bureau would be less obstructed. Before the Indian can cope with the white man he must be taught to want something better than he now has, and how to go about getting it and holding on to it. This sort of desire and ability should figure largely in the estimate of an Indian's competency, according to the present policy of the Indian Bureau. That is, the issuance of a patent in fee should be based largely upon the Indian's real accomplishments on his land or in the particular industry in which he is engaged, such as actual self-maintenance and evidence of both the ability and the inclination to exert it, for a definite period prior to his application for a fee title to his land. It is the earnest work of the Indian Service to create and stimulate this ambition, this individualism which can not be done hurriedly, and without which full citizenship in most cases is a misfortune to the Indian.

Mr. Malcolm McDowell, a penetrating observer and member of the Board of Indian Commissioners, points to the dangers of a too liberal course in releasing the Indians from the Government's protection. He says:

> The swindling of Indians who lease their lands without Federal supervision, the robbing of Indians of their lands by legal processes, the accumulation of unsettled estates, and the proper conservation of Indian property by the Government call for the repeal or modification of several acts. The approaching end of the 25-year trust period when all of the restricted members of the Five Civilized Tribes, most of whom are unprepared for the change, will be released from Government supervision demands the consideration of the proposition to extend the trust period beyond 1931.

To allow Indian tribal councils to administer their affairs is to assume that the Indians generally are as competent as the average whites. This we know is not the case and therefore the course suggested is indefensible from the standpoint of the interests of the Indians.

Under ample laws now existing the Indian is being citizenized and required to shift for himself at the earliest practicable date compatible with the treatment that would be accorded a white minor by a white guardian.

The Indian problem is no longer a matter of reservation. Each tribe or band or settlement of Indians requires individual or separate treatment, and a general plan of settlement would be disastrous where local conditions would require different treatment.

In a word, the only just, logical way to deal with the Indian problem is to consider each Indian as the problem. That is what the Government is now doing, and its course is a reasonable and common-sense method. To turn loose en masse all the Indians of this country would be to drive them like sheep into the wolf pen of financial greed. In fact, to do so would shock the moral sense of the Nation, practically exterminate the Indian race, increase the already onerous burden of the States groaning under heavy taxation, and put a stigma forever upon the fair name of the Union.

The onslaught upon the Indian Bureau, to which reference has been made here, is largely a whirlwind of verbiage, as appears in the following paragraph:

> The Indian Bureau is a despot which can do as it likes with the life, liberties, the possessions, and the occupation of every individual Indian on the rolls. Its only thought in meeting a problem is through tyrannical exercise of arbitrary power. Not by counsel, but by coercion does it undertake its tasks. It relies on force, never on fellowship. Its policy is the exact opposite of the fundamental principles upon which the American Nation was founded. To its inspection and control and interference is subject everything that an Indian does or says or thinks or has. It is the most determined enemy of personal freedom and civil liberty that can be found anywhere on earth since the Czar of all the Russias lost his throne.

Can anyone read such statements and not suspect that such utterances are the culmination of schemes and propaganda that have thus far been unsuccessful? Can anyone with the least inclination to fairness or a small knowledge of Indian affairs as administered by the Government's established agencies fail to be impressed from the very inherent quality of such statements that it is a total misrepresentation, based upon misconceptions that are not parallel with the Indian's highest welfare? It would seem that such unmerited abuse of upright, capable public service should be its own answer and condemnation wherever it receives the attention of sober and intelligent judgment.

No adequate mention has been made here of many other large phases of Indian progress that will appear to the honest investigator of Indian problems. The general improvement in the Indians' conditions as compared with any former period can be found in such facts as their better health and increasing population; in the largest school enrollment during their history; in the number who speak English and who can read and write that language; in the 80 per cent who wear citizen's garb and the more than 50,000 families living in permanent houses; in their moral and religious uplift through education and missionary influence, and the great increase of Indian marriages by legal procedure; in the number who have received allotments of land and their progress in citizenship; in their industrial advancement indicated by such items as $30,000,000 invested in home buildings and farm implements, nearly 1,000,000 acres under cultivation, $35,000,000 worth of live stock, annual crop production reaching $12,000,000, an annual income of $25,000,000 from minerals alone, and 37,000 of their farmers benefited by irrigation; in their splendid loyalty to the national flag and their brilliant record in the World War. Whoever will look impartially for the proof of Indian betterment will be slow to denounce the Government's record.

Without doubt the Indians in times past have been unjustly treated. If we draw a conclusion from their earlier history or note their spoliation from individual examples of the white man's greed and weigh only administrative mistakes and shortcomings, we shall find much to condemn. But if, on the other hand, we measure Indian development in comparison with that of other races, admitting the incidental and regrettable things that human selfishness has put into all history in all times, but giving credit for the higher purposes and juster achievements that have prevailed; if we rationally estimate civilization, not as the growth of a few decades or even generations but as the evolution of centuries, and frame a verdict from the ripened results rather than from errors of judgment and pernicious motives along the way, we shall find that our Government, although not always blameless in its dealings with the Indian, has lifted him incomparably above the barbarous paganism of his precolonial era and brought him to a station and condition that insure the perpetuation and eminence of his race in the future of his native land.

At the request of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, I submit herewith report of the Committee on Indian Affairs on the so-called Snyder bill affecting the Pueblo Indians:

[House Report No. 1748, Sixty-seventh Congress, fourth session.]

TITLES TO LANDS WITHIN PUEBLO INDIAN LAND GRANTS.

Mr. SNYDER, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, submitted the following report to accompany S. 3855:

The Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3855) to quiet the titles to lands within Pueblo Indian land grants, and for other purposes, having considered the same, report thereon with a recommendation that it do pass without amendment.

The bill affects land claimed by the Pueblo Indians of New Mexico.

The history of the Pueblo Indians is extremely interesting, and it is necessary to briefly outline it in order to understand the necessity of legislation of the character now proposed.

There are 20 pueblos involved, with a total Indian population of between 8,000 and 9,000. Each pueblo consists of about 17,000 acres of land within its exterior boundaries, or a total of 340,000 acres in all.

These Indians were found by Coronado and the first Spanish explorers in 1541, many of them residing in the villages and occupying the same lands that the Pueblo Indians now occupy.

The right of these Indians to the lands occupied by them was recognized by the Spanish conquerors from early days. The first decree of record concerning them was issued by Charles V of Spain dated March 21, 1551, when they were ordered gathered into pueblos or towns. In 1687 a grant of lands was made to them by the King of Spain, and from that time on until the termination of Spanish dominion grants of land were made at various times, and the Spanish authorities supervised their affairs. The Spanish grant to each pueblo as finally conferred by Congress became 4 square leagues, 1 league in each direction from the center of the village or the door of the church.

Grants, however, were also made by Spain to Spaniards, some of which fell within or overlapped the grants to the Indians. Upon the termination of Spanish sovereignty these Indians came under the dominion of Mexico, and they were given enlarged political and civil rights by Mexico. All of the grants were held by the Indians and are now held in communal ownership.

Upon the acquisition by the United States from Mexico of the territory now comprising the State of New Mexico these Indians and their lands came under the jurisdiction of the United States, and in 1859 Congress confirmed the Spanish grants to the Indians, subject, however, to any valid adverse rights should any exist.

The status of these Indians as to whether or not they were wards of the Government was not definitely settled until 1913.

There was great difference of opinion as to their character and intelligence. In the case of United States v. Joseph, 94 U. S. 614, the Supreme Court of the United States, speaking of these Indians, said:

"The character and history of these people are not obscure, but occupy a well-known page in the story of Mexico, from the conquest of the country by Cortez to the cession of this part of it to the United States by the treaty of Guadaloupe Hidalgo. The subject is tempting and full of interest, but we have only space for a few well-considered sentences of the opinion of the chief justice of the court whose judgment we are reviewing:

"'For centuries,' he says, 'The Pueblo Indians have lived in villages, in fixed communities, each having its own municipal or local government. As far as their history can be traced they have been a pastoral and agricultural people, raising flocks and cultivating the soil. Since the introduction of the Spanish Catholic missionary into the country they have adopted mainly not only the Spanish language but the religion of a Christian church. In every pueblo is erected a church, dedicated to the worship of God according to the form of the Roman Catholic religion, and in nearly all is to be found a priest of this church, who is recognized as their spiritual guide and adviser. They manufacture nearly all of their blankets, clothing, agricultural and culinary implements, etc. Integrity and virtue among them is fostered and encouraged. They are intelligent as most nations or people deprived of means or facilities for education. Their names, their customs, their habits are similar to those of the people in whose midst they reside or in the midst of whom their pueblos are situated. The criminal records of the courts of the Territory scarcely contain the name of a Pueblo Indian. In short, they are a peaceable, industrious, intelligent, honest, and virtuous people. They are Indians only in feature, complexion, and a few of their habits; in all other respects superior to all but a few of the civilized Indian tribes of the country, and the equal of the most civilized thereof. This description of the Pueblo Indians, I think, will be deemed by all who know them as faithful and true in all respects. Such was their character at the time of the acquisition of New Mexico by the United States, such is their character now.'

"At the time the act of 1834 was passed there were no such Indians as these in the United States unless it be one or two reservations or tribes, such as the Senecas or Oneidas of New York, to whom, it is clear, the eleventh section of the statute could have no application. When it became necessary to extend the laws regulating intercourse with the Indians over our new acquisitions from Mexico there was ample room for the exercise of those laws among the nomadic Apaches, Comanches, Navajoes, and other tribes, whose incapacity for self-government required both for themselves and for the citizens of the country this guardian care of the General Government.

"The Pueblo Indians, if, indeed, they can be called Indians, had nothing in common with this class. The degree of civilization which they had attained centuries before their willing submission to all laws of the Mexican Government, the full recognition by that Government of all their civil rights, including that of voting and holding office, and their absorption into the general mass of the population (except that they held their lands in common), all forbid the idea that they should be classed with the Indian tribes for whom the intercourse acts were made, or that in the intent of the act of 1851 its provisions were applicable to them. The tribes for whom the act of 1834 was made were those semi-independent tribes whom our Government has always recognized as exempt from our laws, whether within or without the limits of an organized State or Territory, and, in regard to their domestic government, left to their own rules and traditions; in whom we have recognized the capacity to make treaties and with whom the Governments, State and National, deal, with a few exceptions only, in their national or tribal character and not as individuals.

"If the Pueblo Indians differ from the other inhabitants of New Mexico in holding lands in common, and in a certain patriarchal form of domestic life, they only resemble in this regard the Shakers and other communistic societies in this country, and can not for that reason be classed with the Indian tribes of whom we have been speaking."

However, in the case of United States v. Sandoval (213 U. S. 28) the Supreme Court took a different view of these Indians and held they were wards of the Government. In that case the court said:

"The people of the Pueblos, although sedentary rather than nomadic in their inclinations and disposed to peace and industry, are nevertheless Indians in race, customs, and domestic government, always living in separate and isolated communities, adhering to primitive modes of life, largely influenced by superstition and fetichism and chiefly governed according to the crude customs inherited from their ancestors. They are essentially a simple, uninformed, and inferior people."

Speaking of its previous opinion in the Joseph case the court said that the observations there made as to the character of these Indians "were evidently based upon statements in the opinion of the Territorial court, then under review, which are at variance with other recognized sources of information now available."

Up to the time of the decision of the Sandoval case in 1913 it had been assumed by both the Territorial and State courts of New Mexico that the Pueblos had the right to alienate their property. From earliest times also the Pueblos had invited Spaniards and other non-Indians to dwell with them, and in many cases Pueblos and individual Indians attempted to convey lands to non-Indians which under the decision in the Sandoval case they were not competent to do. As a result there are now approximately 3,000 claimants to lands within the exterior boundaries of the Pueblo grants. The non-Indian claimants with their families comprise about 12,000 persons. With few exceptions the non-Indian claims range from a town lot of 25 feet front to a few acres in extent. It was stated, however, in the hearings by all parties that probably 80 per cent of the claims are not resisted by the Indians, and only about 20 per cent of the number will be contested.

Another complication is due to the fact that under Spain and Mexico there were no surveys, hence descriptions were very loose and not subject to reliable identification for any great period of time. It is also alleged that non-Indian claimants have encroached upon Indian lands, have sought to enlarge the boundaries of their claims, and that the rights of the Indians are being constantly violated.

To settle the complicated questions of title and to secure for the Indians all of the lands to which they are equitably entitled is the purpose of this bill.

Section 1 provides for the institution in the District Court of the United States for the District of New Mexico, on behalf of the Pueblo Indians, a suit or suits to quiet title to the lands claimed by them.

By section 2 it is provided that before such suit or suits shall be brought a preliminary investigation of title to lands within the Pueblo grants shall be made by a board to be known as "Pueblo Lands Board," to consist of the Secretary of the Interior, the Attorney General, and a third member to be appointed by the President of the United States. It is made the duty of the said board to investigate, determine, and report the lands within the exterior boundaries of any lands granted or confirmed to the Pueblo Indians of New Mexico by any authority of the United States, or acquired by said Indians as a community by purchase or otherwise, title to which the said board shall find not to have been extinguished in accordance with the provisions of this act. However, all lands within such exterior boundaries are to be included except lands occupied by non-Indian claimants under color of title for a period of 20 years next preceding the passage of the act, or without such color of title but with claim of ownership for a period of 30 years next preceding the passage of the act. If the board is not unanimous that the Indian title is not extinguished to any tract of land, then such tract must be included in the suit. It is required that the board shall report upon each pueblo separately and copies of its report are to be filed in the United States District Court for the District of New Mexico, with the Attorney General of the United States, with the Secretary of the Interior, and with the Board of Indian Commissioners. Upon the filing of each report the Attorney General is required to file a suit to quiet title as aforesaid to the lands described in said report as Indian lands, the Indian title to which is not extinguished.

Section 4 provides that all non-Indian claimants claiming title to or ownership of any lands involved in such suit may plead adverse possession, as follows:

"(a) That in themselves, their ancestors, grantors, privies, or predecessors in interest or claim of interest, they have had open, notorious, actual, exclusive, continuous, adverse possession of the premises claimed for more than 20 years next preceding the passage of this act, under color of title; or

"(b) That in themselves, their ancestors, grantors, privies, or predecessors in interest or claim of interest, they have had open, notorious, actual, exclusive, continuous, adverse possession of the premises claimed for more than 30 years next preceding the passage of this act, with claim of ownership but without color of title."

If the plea of such limitation is successfully maintained, the claimants shall have a decree which shall have the effect of a quit-claim as against the United States and said Indians. The United States may plead the same statute of limitations in favor of the Indians and against non-Indian claimants as non-Indian claimants may plead against the Indians.

Section 6 provides for surveys where necessary and approval by the court.

Section 7 provides that in all original proceedings necessary costs to be determined by the court shall be taxed against the United States, but if an appeal is taken from a final judgment or decree each party shall pay its own costs.

Section 10 provides, as to the lands within the exterior boundaries of the Indian lands referred to, not claimed on behalf of the Indians in such suit, that the Secretary of the Interior shall cause patents to be issued to those who are shown to be entitled thereto, relinquishing all claim of title by the United States of America and the said Indians to said tracts.

By section 11 it is provided that if a non-Indian party to any suit shall assert against the Indian title a claim based upon a Spanish or Mexican grant, and if the court shall find that such claim is superior to that of the Indian claim, no final decree or judgment of ouster shall be entered by the court or writ of possession or assistance shall be allowed against the Indians or any of them unless it shall also be found that such claimant could successfully plead the statute of limitations provided in section 4. In all such cases the court shall ascertain the area and value of the land held by non-Indian claimants, and the Secretary of the Interior is required to make report thereof to Congress with his recommendations. In other words, if any of these old Spanish or Mexican grants to non-Indian claimants shall be sustained as superior to that of the title of the Indians, if the claimant is not in possession so as to successfully plead the statute of limitations provided in section 4, the Indian shall not lose the land, but Congress will be given an opportunity to compensate the non-Indian claimants through appropriations out of the Treasury.

Section 12 provides that if a non-Indian claimant fails to sustain his claim to any land under the provisions of this act, but has held and occupied the same in good faith, claiming the same as his own, and the same has been improved, the value of the improvements shall be found by the court and reported by the Secretary of the Interior to Congress, with request for appropriations to pay such claimant for such improvements at the value so found by the court. In other words, if any non-Indian can not successfully plead the statute of limitation, the land with the improvements thereon shall go to the Indians, but if the claim has been in good faith the matter is to be reported to Congress with a view of compensating such claimant by appropriation out of the Treasury for these improvements.

Under section 13 it is provided that in certain cases lands found to belong to the Indians, but away from the main body of Indian land, may be sold with the consent of the governing authorities of the pueblo involved.

It is believed that this bill is a fair solution of the many complicated problems involved and that under it the rights of the Indians are fully protected, as well as the equitable rights of non-Indian claimants.

Your committee held extensive hearings on the subject and at the request of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, Hon. Charles H. Burke, made broad inquiry, going into the matter of the serious charges which have been recklessly and generally made against the sworn officials of the Government who have the responsibility of administering the affairs of the Indians, and also investigated the campaign of propaganda which has been waged throughout the country dealing with the subject matter of the Pueblo Indians.

The hearings show:

"That Stella M. Atwood, of Riverside, Calif., is the chairman of the Indian welfare committee of the General Federation of Women's Clubs.

"That Mrs. Atwood was treated courteously by the Secretary of the Interior and by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs at all times, and her desire for information was facilitated by the officials.

"That in the pueblo matter she employed one John Collier, who became known as research agent of the General Federation of Women's Clubs.

"That John Collier employed Mr. Francis C. Wilson, of Santa Fe, who assumed thereafter to be the attorney of the General Federation of Women's Clubs.

"That John Collier spent many weeks among the pueblos, visiting each one, and holding meetings and exhorting the Indians.

"That on November 5, 1922, at the instance of Mr. Collier, all of the several pueblos met, through delegates elected, at Santo Domingo, where a council was held which was attended by John Collier and Mr. Francis C. Wilson.

"That at the Santo Domingo council a general appeal was framed and signed by representatives of each of the pueblos, which appeal was published and widely circulated.

"That in December, 1922, Mr. John Collier came to Washington; that he was contributing articles describing the alleged condition of the Pueblo Indians, and particularly articles in the Sunset Magazine, which contain sensational statements, and statements, by implication at least, assailing the integrity of officials in the State of New Mexico as well as the officials of the Government.

"That in January, 1923, 17 Pueblo Indians were brought to Washington, accompanied by Mr. Francis C. Wilson, attorney, and Mrs. Stella M. Atwood, chairman of the Indian welfare committee of the General Federation of Women's Clubs; that there was also in the party a Rev. Father Shuster, a Franciscan friar from the pueblo of Laguna; that the Indians were dressed in attractive and gaudy manner, said to be their ceremonial attire, and they were exhibited at meetings or functions in the city of Washington, later in New York City, and then Chicago.

"That on the occasion of these meetings John Collier, Mrs. Atwood, and others delivered addresses and an appeal was made for funds, and that more than $6,000 was collected in this manner and paid to Mrs. Atwood.

"That, in addition to the moneys collected by Mrs. Atwood, other organizations were formed and were soliciting funds—among others the Eastern Association of Indian Affairs in New York City—and appear to have collected about $2,300; that one Judson King issued an appeal, using the Collier propaganda, asking for contributions; there is no report as to what he may have collected."

The large amount of propaganda that has flooded the mails, newspapers, and magazines can not be passed without comment. Nothing to compare with it has heretofore been seen in connection with Indian legislation pending before Congress. This propaganda has been insidious, untruthful, and malicious and will result in great harm to the Indians of this country if it is permitted to be continued. Some of this propaganda is nothing more nor less than criminal libel. Those responsible for it have attempted to destroy the confidence of the Indians in the Indian Bureau and the officials who are by law charged with their guardianship. They have not only maligned and attempted to destroy the character of these responsible Government officials, but they have severely impugned the motives of Members of Congress. The hearings before this committee have demonstrated that these criticisms are without foundation. Some of those who are responsible for the propaganda themselves appeared before the committee as witnesses, and their testimony discloses that false and slanderous statements against the executive officers of our Government were without foundation or justification and not a single charge contained in some of the most sensational of the published statements, which were a part of the propaganda, was sustained by any competent evidence before your committee. On the contrary, those responsible for these published statements disclaimed any intention of conveying the sole impression that was possible for the average thinking person to reach after reading such publications. Those responsible for this propaganda deserve the strongest condemnation from all fair-minded people.

It was contended in this propaganda that the health conditions of the Pueblo Indians were deplorable and that they were receiving but little assistance from the Government. The facts as brought out in the hearings show that the Government is operating four hospitals among the 8,000 Pueblo Indians, with a total bed capacity of nearly 100; that there are maintained among the Pueblo Indians eight physicians, in addition to field matrons and nurses.

It was also shown in the hearings that there has been a substantial increase in the population of the Pueblo Indians during the last year, and that the health of these Indians is fairly good.

The propagandists attempted to make it appear that the Pueblo Indians were starving and were in serious need of assistance. The records disclose that only 2 of the 18 pueblos—San Ildefonso and Tesuque—with a total population of approximately 240 out of the 8,000 Pueblo Indians were in need of any assistance, and that the Government had provided them with ample funds to meet their needs.

It was also contended that but little had been done in the past for the Pueblo Indians by the Government. The testimony before your committee shows that during the last 10 years the Government has expended more than $8,000,000 for the Indians in New Mexico; that approximately $250,000 is being expended annually (out of gratuity appropriations from the Government) for educational work among Pueblo Indians; that two splendid boarding schools are being maintained for them at Albuquerque and Santa Fe, in addition to a large number of day schools, and that practically all of the Pueblo Indian children have excellent educational facilities.

It was claimed in this propaganda that the Indian Bureau had done nothing for these Indians as to irrigation, whereas the records show that during the last 15 years the Government has expended for the Pueblo Indians in Arizona and New Mexico, for irrigation purposes and development of domestic and stock water, $1,176,146.97.

It was also claimed that the Government has not provided the Pueblo Indians with sufficient water for irrigation purposes. The records show that there is under ditch in the Pueblo country 32,682 acres, whereas the Indians cultivated only 17,334 acres of that irrigated land, leaving 15,000 acres not under cultivation. In addition to providing irrigation systems, the Government has constructed in recent years 80 wells to supply the Pueblo Indians with domestic and stock water, at a cost of about $90,000.

It was contended by the propagandists that but little money was being appropriated for these Indians, but it was disclosed in the hearings that there are specific appropriations for the Pueblos for the fiscal year 1924 amounting to $86,000, and that the Government expended during the last fiscal year $408,761.66 out of all appropriations for the benefit of the Pueblo Indians.

It was shown in the hearings that the Indian Bureau has caused to be added to the Pueblos of New Mexico, by Executive order, during recent years a total of nearly 400,000 acres of land—to be exact, 397,193.27 acres.

It was also brought out in the hearings that the Indian Bureau is responsible for the legislation contained in the New Mexico enabling act, which protects the Pueblo Indians, and that under that legislation it will be impossible for any of the Pueblo Indians or the pueblos to lose title to any of their lands after the passage of the New Mexico enabling act of 1910.

Notwithstanding the fact that the Pueblo Indians have never ceded to the United States a single acre of land, and that the jurisdiction of the Federal Government was somewhat limited, as shown by the decision of the Supreme Court in the Joseph case (94 U. S. 614), until the admission of the Territory of New Mexico into statehood, and the decision of the Supreme Court in the Sandoval case (231 U. S. 28), it will be seen that the Government has been making liberal appropriations for many years for the Pueblo Indians. As shown by the hearings, the Government has provided generously for the education of the Pueblo children without cost to the Pueblo Indians. It has furnished them farmers and stockmen to encourage them in agriculture and stock raising; has provided a number of physicians for medical service, in addition to providing four substantial hospitals located among the pueblos, all without cost to the Indians, as well as furnishing them with irrigation systems on their lands. Also, it has made surveys for further improvement and extension of irrigation systems.

Nowhere has it been shown that the Government or the Indian Bureau has been negligent in protecting the interest of these Indians and looking after their welfare. On the other hand, it appears from the hearings that the Pueblo Indians have been treated equally as well, if not better, than the average Indians of the United States, and that annual expenditures for the Pueblo Indians have averaged approximately $50 per capita of gratuity appropriations from the Treasury of the United States.

Inasmuch as a recent act of Congress has granted to the State of New Mexico an additional Federal judge, it is believed by your committee that if this judge could be exclusively assigned to the hearing of the land-title claims of the Pueblo Indians it would not only be the proper but the least expensive and most practical method of relieving the situation.

REPRESENTATIVE HARDY OF TEXAS.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr Speaker and gentlemen, at noon to-day the gentleman from Texas, Judge HARDY, voluntarily retires after 16 years of distinguished service as a Member of this body. During that entire time he has been a faithful, diligent, conscientious, able, and valuable member of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries. In recognition of his services upon that committee and as an evidence of the esteem in which he is held by all the members of that committee, upon motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EDMONDS], the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries unanimously adopted, and all the members thereof, except Judge HARDY, signed the resolutions which were spread upon the minutes of that committee. As I believe these resolutions correctly depict the views of all the Members of this House, I ask unanimous consent that I may incorporate them in my remarks. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to incorporate the resolutions referred to in his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The resolutions are as follows:

Whereas Hon. RUFUS HARDY has been a Member of the House of Representatives from the sixth district of Texas for the past 16 years, and has during that period been a continuous member of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries; and

Whereas he has rendered faithful, conscientious, and valuable service upon said committee and in the House of Representatives with respect to legislation reported out of said committee; and

Whereas the members of said committee hold Representative HARDY in the highest esteem and appreciate his faithful work and valuable counsel; and

Whereas, Judge HARDY is voluntarily retiring from Congress upon the expiration of his present term: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, That we deeply regret this decision of our colleague to retire from Congress, which will deprive this committee of his able work and wise counsel in our future deliberations; but that we wish for him every success and happiness in the future and continued usefulness in whatever line of endeavor to which he may apply himself; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of this committee be, and he is hereby, directed to spread these resolutions upon the minutes of the committee, and that a copy of the resolutions signed by the members of the committee shall be presented to Representative HARDY.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GREENE] is recognized for two minutes. [Applause.]

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I am the only member of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries who has served with Judge HARDY the whole 16 years since he has been a Member. I want to say that I have been brought in close touch with him. Sometimes he has been with me, but more frequently in opposition, but the opposition has been beneficial to the work of the committee, because he has been clear-headed and thoughtful. He has presented everything in an orderly way and conducted himself so that all the committee are glad to send him home at the end of 16 years, when he voluntarily retires, with resolutions of appreciation signed by every member of the committee. [Applause.]

Judge HARDY is not quite as old as I am, and he is young in thought. He will do well, I have no doubt, in the State of Texas. I have had the pleasure of going to the State of Texas. I went there before I came to this House or ever thought of coming. It is a very large and very prosperous State; in fact, one of the most prosperous in the country. The only thing wrong about it is that some people there are very narrow politically, but the State itself is good enough for a Republican to live in. [Laughter.] If I was at liberty and had money enough, I would go down there and live, because it is a very comfortable State, but I have not money enough to go there. I am very glad to pay this tribute of love and respect to Judge HARDY, who voluntarily retires from the House with the close of the session to-day. [Applause.]

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I call up from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 11528) to allow credits in the accounts of certain disbursing officers of the Army of the United States, with Senate amendments thereto, and I move to concur in the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York calls up a House bill with Senate amendments, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, is not that a question of unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No; it is a matter of privilege. The question is on agreeing to the Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were agreed to.

PUBLIC DISORDERS IN THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate Concurrent Resolution 35, which is a matter reported from the Printing Committee, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate Concurrent Resolution 35.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Attorney General be, and is hereby, authorized and instructed to print, as an appendix to his last annual report, full copies of all telegraphic and other correspondence between the Department of Justice and public officers and agents, private persons, railroad companies, and their officers and agents, in the year 1922, relative to the disorders in the United States of America during said year and to the action taken by the Government of the United States in suppressing the same.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

TEXAS AND SOUTHWESTERN CATTLE RAISERS' ASSOCIATION.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, the Texas and Southwestern Cattle Raisers' Association, the greatest association on this earth in numbers and personnel, will meet in the greatest city in this country in the greatest State of the Union on the 12th day of March, 1923. I am authorized and requested to invite the Congress of the United States to meet in the city of El Paso at that time as the guests of that association. I am also authorized to state that your eats will be provided during the entire time that you are there, likewise your drinks. [Prolonged applause.]

VENTILATION OF THE HOUSE CHAMBER.

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from North Dakota asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. Speaker, and gentlemen of the House, I desire to call attention to the ventilation in this Chamber.

Mr. McARTHUR. There is none.

Mr. YOUNG. My friend from Oregon [Mr. McARTHUR] appreciates the situation. There are no windows in any part of this Chamber and all the doors lead to hallways and corridors. The ventilation is all artificial. Modern hospitals now get air through windows. That is the best way. The Clerk of the House, Mr. William Tyler Page, at my request, has prepared a mortality statement of the Members of the House and Senate for the past 30 years, which I shall put in the RECORD. I call attention to the fact that when a Congress has been in session a large number of days, the mortality has greatly increased. The only exception was for the Sixty-third Congress, but it will be remembered that the Ways and Means was the only committee organized during the first session. The other committees did not function and the House was inactive much of the time. There were 23 deaths during the Sixty-seventh Congress.

Mr. SNELL. Does the table include political deaths that take place from time to time?

Mr. YOUNG. No. This is a matter, I think, that ought to be considered seriously, because unless something is done to give us real ventilation it may mean to all of us a death that is worse than political death. The gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. WASON], made a statement in the restaurant recently that there was not a church or a school or any public meeting place in the State of New Hampshire that was not better ventilated than this Chamber.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. YOUNG. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. Is the gentleman trying to discourage opposition to sitting Members of the House by calling attention to the death rate? [Laughter.]

Mr. YOUNG. No. I want to have alterations made which will let the good pure air sweep through here, carrying all impurities before it. I would like to have it made a healthy work place not only for ourselves, but those who succeed us. I hope gentlemen will give this tabulation prepared by Mr. Page, Clerk of the House, a careful reading and consideration during the legislative recess. It is well worth while.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. YOUNG. Yes.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Would it not be better for us to cut out some of this hot air that we have here?

Mr. YOUNG. If we had direct ventilation through windows and doors we might be able to get some of the smoke and the bad air out of the Chamber. To my mind it is a very serious subject.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Does not the gentleman think it would be well, when the House adjourns every day, instead of closing all of the doors and keeping in the foul air, for some of the employees to get here early in the morning, open all the doors and the windows outside, and let fresh air pass through the Chamber?

Mr. YOUNG. I surely do. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD this statement which has been prepared by Mr. William Tyler Page.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from North Dakota asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

THE WORK OF THE CONGRESS.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes on the work of the Congress.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes on the work of the Congress. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, the Congress now closing is unique in our history in that it has held four sessions, and in the further fact that it has been in session more days than any other Congress in our history, with one exception. The volume of business transacted has been enormous, the problems met and passed upon, many and difficult. In my opinion, the verdict of history will be that no Congress has met its great duties and responsibilities in a finer way or handled them more satisfactorily; and this applies with particular force, in my opinion, to the record of the House of Representatives. [Applause.]

In saying this I want to pay tribute to the cooperation of the minority. [Applause.] We have had many questions before us, not political in character, in the settlement of which we have had the finest cooperation on the part of Members on the Democratic side.

Precisely one-half of the term of the present national administration has passed. The best possible test of its accomplishments will be found, I think, in a survey of general conditions in the country to-day in contrast with those of two years ago to-day. I do not hesitate to say that such a survey will convince any fair observer that our country has made in this period a far greater advance than any other great nation has accomplished in the same period.

Looking back from the stage of lively industrial and commercial activity which we now occupy we are likely to forget that two years ago the country was in a condition of acute business depression, one incident of which was a state of unemployment without parallel in our history. The most thorough and conservative analysis of the situation at that time placed the number of unemployed producers at from four and a half million to five million. The situation contained many elements of positive menace to the country. From many quarters there were demands for the inauguration of various plans of paternalistic aid and schemes of State socialism. Such so-called remedies were adopted in other countries with results which are now universally recognized as disastrous.

Fortunately the American Government determined to deal with the situation by making an appeal to the native genius, the cooperative instinct, the desire for service and helpfulness, so characteristic of our people. Instead of taking the Government into business and putting premiums on unemployment, plans were laid for enlisting the efforts of all our people in the amelioration of conditions. Conferences on housing, on unemployment, on agricultural conditions were held. Steps were taken to ease the difficult credit situation by a prompt reversal of the policy of extreme and drastic deflation and the extension of sane and timely aid. Measures were taken to encourage effectively the development of foreign demand and domestic and foreign markets for our agricultural products. Thus the American community was given aid, direction, and leadership in the effort to help itself.

The story of how well these policies succeeded is known to all. To-day, instead of having 5,000,000 men out of employment, the country has many jobs seeking workers and unable to find them. Moreover, this has been accomplished without that enormous deflation of the wages of the workers which many insisted was absolutely necessary before industry could be resumed on a sound basis. Following some early wage reductions, the tendency for a long period now has been upward rather than downward. The results of these two years of legislation and administration are inspiring. Turn where you will in the world, you will find no country that has been able to parallel our accomplishments in the last two years. Go into the history of industrial cycles as the economists have written that history and you will find no record so impressive, so thoroughgoing a recovery from a desperately bad situation in anything like so brief a period.

THE RECORD OF THE CONGRESS.

In carrying out the policies of the party, upholding the hands of and cooperating with the administration, the Congress, particularly the House of Representatives, has played a conspicuous and leading part. No Congress that ever sat has been more diligent in attendance upon the public business. The House of Representatives has made a particularly splendid record of wise economy, sound and helpful legislation. [Applause.]

During the Sixty-seventh Congress 931 laws were placed upon the statute books; of these 655 were of a public and 276 of a private character. This is at the rate of approximately one and one-half laws for every one of the 624 days in which the Congress was in session. In addition to these, the House considered and passed 144 measures which did not become laws or reach a stage of final consideration by the Congress. Some of these were of great importance, such as the resolution for an amendment to the Constitution with a view of doing away with income tax-free securities, the shipping bill, and the antilynching bill.

On the 20th of last September, at the close of the second session of this Congress, I addressed the House on the record of the Sixty-seventh Congress up to that time, and in doing so I found it necessary to refer briefly to the work of the Sixty-sixth Congress in order to secure the proper perspective for the work of the Sixty-seventh Congess, and following that I outlined the legislation of the Sixty-seventh Congress up to that time. With the permission of the House I shall insert at this point some extracts from that address, as follows:

PATRIOTIC COOPERATION.

"Providence, whose ways are past finding out, willed that our party should not occupy the seats of national power when the great conflict in Europe threw its menace across the face of the earth, and that fact afforded opportunity for the display of the finest spirit of patriotic cooperation and helpfulness ever shown by an opposition and minority party in all the annals of civil government. This party, that had proven its loyalty and strength when in position of responsibility and control, rose to the supreme height of unselfish patriotic helpfulness as a minority in the hour of the Nation's need and peril.

THE SIXTY-SIXTH CONGRESS.

"The backhanded reward for that patriotic service came in the nature of a presidential call to place none but Democrats on guard, and the American people answered with the Republican Sixty-sixth Congress.

"We must begin with that Congress if we are to secure the perspective from which to intelligently view the outlook of to-day. The President, who had asked for a Congress of a different political faith, was compelled to call it into session in May, 1919, to enact the seven great supply bills which its Democratic predecessor had failed to pass. The Congress promptly justified the people's faith by reducing the appropriation bills $940,000,000 below the sums they carried when considered in the former Democratic Congress.

"When that Republican Congress met six months had passed since the signing of the armistice, but we were just reaching the peak of our war expenditures. In the fiscal year then drawing toward its close the total expenditures of the Government were $18,500,000,000—a sum greater than our total Government expenditures in the 30 years preceding the outbreak of the European war. The total gross public debt of the United States had risen from the sum of a little over $1,000,000,000 at the outbreak of the war to the stupendous sum of almost $26,000,000,000.

"We were still technically and officially at war. The railroads were still being operated by the Government at a cost to the taxpayer of nearly $2,000,000 a day, with high rates and poor service. The telegraph and telephone lines were still under the public control. The war laws were still upon the statute books. More than $30,000,000,000 of the people's money had been expended since the war began—more money than the Government had spent in all the years since the Civil War. All the world outside our borders was prostrate from the effects of the Great War and not an industry or an enterprise anywhere was functioning normally. This was the condition of affairs when we first came into responsibility after the Great War.

WHAT THE SIXTY-SIXTH CONGRESS DID.

"That Congress returned the railroads, the telegraph, telephone, and cable lines to their owners; passed comprehensive legislation for the compensation, hospitalization, and vocational training of the veterans of the World War; adopted the woman suffrage amendment; placed on the statute books a complete and comprehensive national prohibition law; enacted the general leasing and water power acts; the civil service retirement act; the act for the relief of those disabled in industry; the Army reorganization act; and other constructive measures too numerous to mention.

"That Congress passed the Budget act only to meet with a presidential veto. It attempted to restore a condition of official peace with a like result, and even a resolution repealing the war laws, attempting to restore constitutional conditions of government, failed because a President drunk with power refused, a year after the war was over, to surrender one iota of his extraordinary and despotic power.

"This Sixty-sixth Congress, which began its record with a saving of nearly a billion dollars on seven appropriation bills, continued its record of economy by reducing the appropriations nearly two and one-half million dollars below the estimates. The expenditure of eighteen and one-half billions in the fiscal year in which the Congress began its sessions was reduced to an expenditure of less than six and one-half billions in the first full fiscal year for which the Congress appropriated and to an expenditure of a little more than five billions in the fiscal year during which the Congress ended.

BEGINNING OF THE HARDING ADMINISTRATION.

"The splendid record of the Sixty-sixth Congress for economy and constructive legislation challenged the admiration of the American people and paved the way for the wonderful victory of 1920, while the multiplying evidences of extravagance, incompetency, and graft which characterized the Wilson administration rendered inevitable the astounding victory which gave us a Republican President and a Republican Congress on the 4th of March, 1921.

"April 11 saw the Congress in special session, charged by the President with the duty of lifting the tax burdens, revising the tariff, restoring peace, and legislating toward the restoration of normalcy.

"The inevitable reaction from a period of enormous inflation and expenditure, of high wages, flush times, and easy money had arrived. The cold gray dawn of the morning after was upon us. The dance was over and the fiddler was demanding his pay.

"The multiplied ills of the period of deflation, acute everywhere, fell most heavily upon the farmer and the stockman, and to his relief the new administration and the new Congress turned even before it took up the great tasks of general tax and tariff legislation, of budgetary and general restoration and reform.

"All the world beyond our borders was in acute distress, or threatened with bankruptcy and financial collapse. Ours was the only treasure chest in the world fr m which real money could be secured in exchange for commodities, and so they came to us from the ends of the earth, pouring through every custom-house. Eggs from China, frozen meats from Australia and the Argentine, wool from everywhere, and prices of these and other farm products were on the toboggan.

AGRICULTURAL LEGISLATION.

"Within two days after the Congress met the House of Representatives reported an emergency agricultural tariff bill. Within two more days it had passed the House, and in a little more than a month it was a law. It checked the downward trend of prices, and gradually, as the surplus of imported stocks was exhausted, there came the upward trend. Wool soon reached a fairly remunerative level and, with the return of normal and favorable conditions, bound to follow the settlement of the coal and rail strikes, there is every prospect of satisfactory prices for all agricultural products.

"The passage of the emergency tariff bill only partly met the needs of the agricultural and live-stock industries. The staggering blows these industries had received demanded heroic and unusual remedies. Credit and an abundance of it was essential.

"It was not an easy problem from a national standpoint. The first suggestions were neither adequate nor practical, but the administration and the Congress worked out the problem through the revival, the extension, and the enlargement of the powers of the War Finance Corporation and the establishment of a credit of a billion dollars in this institution. Four hundred millions have been advanced—approximately three hundred millions to the farmers and the stockmen of the West.

"It is no exaggeration to say that these two measures—the emergency tariff and the war finance loans—have been the salvation, the saving, of the live-stock industry of the West, and in saving that industry the Nation has performed a great service not only for those directly interested but for those indirectly interested in the maintenance of an adequate meat supply for the Nation.

"Some of the down-east folks have been inclined to think that this Congress was organized mainly to look after the interests of the farmer and the stockman of the country, and this view has a considerable basis in the long list of the legislation of the Congress helpful to those industries and interests. It includes such important legislation as the packer bill, which was reported in the House of Representatives within a month after the Congress assembled, was passed promptly, and after some delay in the Senate became a law on August 4, 1921; the bill prohibiting gambling in grain futures, which passed the House within a month after the Congress convened, and became a law only to be held unconstitutional by the Supreme Court. A new measure, believed to be constitutional, was promptly passed and is now a law.

"The cooperative marketing act was reported to the House of Representatives and passed that body in less than 30 days after the Congress met, and after a long delay in the Senate it became a law in February last. These and other bills, enlarging the facilities of the land banks and otherwise aiding and assisting agriculture, have received the prompt attention and consideration of the Congress.

GENERAL LEGISLATION.

"But legislation in the aid of agriculture, while it had the first attention of Congress, by no means monopolized its energies. The Budget bill which fell under the ax of President Wilson's veto was revived promptly, placed upon the statute books, and through the appointment of Gen. Charles G. Dawes as Budget Director got actively at work.

"The peace resolution, relieved from the menace of a presidential veto, restored a condition of official peace with the Central Empires.

"The tax revision, reducing the annual tax burden nearly a billion dollars.

"The Fordney tariff, under which the Nation's labor and industries are protected.

"The maternity bill, the prompt passage of which had been recommended by President Harding, after some delay and vicissitudes, became a law.

"All national activities in behalf of the disabled and injured soldiers were combined in the Veterans' Bureau.

"The national highway act—highly important provisions were placed upon the statute books.

"The immigration restriction act.

"The acts to prevent profiteering in coal and providing for a coal fact finding commission.

"The Shipping Board and Emergency Fleet Corporation were placed upon a more substantial basis, pending further legislation in the aid of the merchant marine.

"The foreign debt refunding act provides a commission and authority for the refunding of the $11,000,000,000 debt owed us by foreign nations.

"All these and much more in the way of useful, helpful, and constructive legislation occupied the time and attention of the Congress.

THE TAX REVISION LIFTING THE BURDEN.

"The House took up and passed the general tariff bill first, but the Senate reversed the order and passed the tax bill before they began to give consideration to the general tariff.

"The tax revision could not, in the nature of things, have satisfied everybody, nor was it possible, under the conditions of the Public Treasury, and in view of the obligations and increased demands growing out of or resulting from the war, to reduce the tax burden to the extent that the Congress would have been glad to have reduced it. It must, however, be admitted by all that so far as the revision went it proceeded along sound and sane lines. There was an actual lifting rather than a shifting of the tax burden. There was not only an honest but a successful attempt to relieve fairly and equitably, so far as was possible under the circumstances, the tax burdens of all classes of the people. It reduced the burden for the calendar year 1921 in the sum of approximately $800,000,000 and, according to the latest estimates of the Treasury, relieves the tax burden for the present calendar year nearly a billion dollars.

BURDEN LIFTED EQUITABLY.

"The Federal taxgatherer no longer collects taxes on ice-cream cones, soda water, pills and lotions, or parcel post, nor exacts tribute on transportation or on the purchase of wearing apparel. The man of moderate means, and particularly such a man with a family, has had his income-tax burdens appreciably lightened. Those classes of taxation which were most successfully passed on to the consuming public, or which most hampered and retarded business transactions and discouraged or prevented the growth and development of productive enterprise, like the excess-profits tax and the higher brackets of the surtax, no longer exercise their deterrent effects upon business and development. In the nature of things this was not a finality in tax revision, for, as we get away from the war burdens and escape the inevitable expenditures of the war's aftermath, we shall be able to still further lighten the burden of direct Federal levies and relieve the people and the industry of the country from the handicap that heavy taxation inevitably entails.

"The tax on transportation has been lifted in the sum of $270,000,000; the tax on amusement admission and dues, $100,000,000; on parcel post, $20,000,000; and so on down the line. The excess-profits tax, justified for a brief period in time of war, indefensible in time of peace because it was inevitably passed on and multiplied to the consumer, was repealed. The high income surtaxes, 67 per cent on large incomes, were reduced to 50 per cent, or a total of 58 per cent with the normal tax, with the hope of bringing about the return of large incomes from the field of tax-free securities to the field of productive industry—a field in which we of the West, needing development, are tremendously interested.

"What shall we do with the ten or fifteen billion income-tax free State, county, municipal, and school district bonds? So long as they remain tax free it is useless to assess an income tax of 58 per cent on the earnings of large fortunes. They simply stop earning in productive enterprise and go into the tax-free field. We must either get the States, school districts, and municipalities to give up the benefits of having their bonds tax free, or we must reduce the high surtax and thus secure a greater tax return from large fortunes than we are able to secure with a high surtax which can be escaped in the safe haven of tax-free bonds.

"There is a bill before the House of Representatives proposing a constitutional amendment to enable the Federal Government to tax these bonds of the States and their subdivisions. The matter will be put up to the people of the States for them to decide what they desire to do about it.

REVISION OF THE TARIFF.

"Congress has had no more important problem before it than that of the revision of the tariff laws. The House proceeded to the consideration of the question promptly and vigorously, and prepared and passed the Fordney tariff bill in a little more than three months after the assembling of the Congress.

"There has been much criticism of the long delay of the tariff in the Senate, 13 months having elapsed from the time the bill was presented to that body until it passed. It must be remembered, however, that never had conditions surrounding the preparation and enactment of tariff legislation been so trying; never has the ascertainment of foreign costs been so difficult; never have prices and values been so rapidly and widely fluctuating.

"The House adopted a plan of American valuation of imports. The Senate fixed its rates on the basis of foreign valuation. The same ad valorem rates, therefore, give a higher measure of protection in the House than in the Senate bill.

"As finally agreed upon the rule of foreign valuation was, in the main, adopted, but with it a most important provision, under which the President is authorized under certain conditions to increase or decrease rates not to exceed 50 per cent or to transfer them to American valuation. This provision empowers the President to meet, to a very considerable extent at least, the conditions that seemed to demand and justify American valuation; it grants the President discretionary powers to impose additional duties or prohibitions upon imports from any country discriminating against the overseas commerce of the United States.

RATES AND PROVISIONS.

"Notwithstanding the very great difficulties surrounding the preparation of tariff legislation at this time the bill as prepared and perfected will, it is believed, prove, taken all in all, the best tariff measure that has ever been placed upon the statute books. The rates, while high enough to afford needed relief from the effects of the Underwood tariff law, still average lower than the rates under the Payne-Aldrich tariff law, and lower than the rates under any Republican tariff bill heretofore enacted.

Some of the agricultural schedules are somewhat higher than the Payne rates, but lower than the rates carried in the emergency tariff bill, which the general tariff supersedes.

"The administrative features of the bill are admirable, and are a very substantial improvement over the provisions of existing law. The provisions of the act place in the hands of the President authority to meet any situation which may develop under which the rates provided may require adjustment."

HOW THE NEW TARIFF HAS WORKED.

What I said on the 20th of last September, as above quoted, applies equally now.

Notwithstanding the difficulties which surrounded the enactment of a tariff bill our experience under the Fordney-McCumber Act has demonstrated the wisdom of that legislation. Under it our productive industries have returned to or are rapidly reaching a condition of normal and prosperous operation. In many lines production has largely increased and the handicaps, hindrances, and difficulties of war and after-war conditions have very largely passed away. The most impressive fact in connection with this readjustment and return of normalcy and prosperity is to be found in the wiping out of the appalling register of the unemployed—the fact that there is a job and employment for all who seek it.

The figures of imports and exports and of customs receipts for the months of October, November, and December, 1922, the first three months of the new tariff and the latest which have been compiled, are most satisfactory from the standpoint of the friends of the new tariff act and must be rather disconcerting to those who prophesied its failure. It was widely and vigorously asserted that the new tariff would seriously interfere with our foreign trade, would make it impossible for Europe to sell us goods and thus meet their obligations, and that it would close the doors of the world to our products. It was even prophesied that we would fail to secure any considerable additional revenue. All these forebodings and prophecies have failed and gone awry. Both imports and exports have increased. Imports have increased approximately $180,000,000 in the three months referred to, as compared with the corresponding three months of the preceding year, while exports have increased approximately $212,000,000 for the same period.

The customs receipts during the same period under the new tariff have been approximately $42,000,000 above the receipts under the old tariff for the same period of the previous year, or at the rate of approximately $150,000,000 annually. The figures are as follows:

Imports and exports.

Month.	Imports.		Exports.
	1922	1921	1922	1921
October	$276,082,699	$188,007,629	$370,718,595	$343,330,815
November	291,905,785	210,948,036	380,056,542	294,092,219
December (estimated)	297,000,000	237,495,505	344,425,364	296,198,373

Customs receipts.

Month.	1922	1921
October	$40,135,000	$26,408,000
November	41,647,000	24,843,000
December	37,502,000	26,155,000

ECONOMY AND RETRENCHMENT.

Nothing has been more urgent and essential to the restoration of normal and favorable conditions in the country than the exercise of strict economy in Government expenditure. The riot of waste and extravagance during the period of the war laid burdens and obligations and put in motion operations that it was exceedingly difficult—in many cases impossible—to avoid, curtail, or eliminate immediately after the close of the war. Notwithstanding the difficulties in the way, the problems were met earnestly and courageously, and, thanks to the new Budget system, to the earnest and faithful efforts of President Harding, to the cooperation that has existed between the Congress and the administration, the results have been gratifying in the extreme.

As a result of economy and good business management of the Nation's affairs, the total gross debt of the Nation was reduced from $26,594,267,878 on August 31, 1919, when it reached its peak, to $22,715,338,730 on February 28, 1923, a total reduction of $3,878,929,148 in three and one-half years.

The reduction in expenditures by years has been as follows:

Fiscal year 1919	$18,514,879,955.00
Fiscal year 1920	6,560,467,535.13
Fiscal year 1921	5,538,209,189.30
Fiscal year 1922	3,795,302,499.84
Fiscal year 1923 (estimated January 15)	3,574,554,132.00

The enormous reduction of more than $12,000,000,000 between the expenditures of 1919 and 1920 is the more striking feature of this comparison. But other than that, the most remarkable showing ever made in Government retrenchment in time of peace is to be found in the expenditures for the fiscal year which closed last July of nearly three billions below the expenditures for 1920.

STILL PAYING WAR COSTS.

The triumph of economy and good administration which these figures eloquently portray is more clearly understood when we take into consideration the fact that we are still paying out of current revenues vast sums to meet war costs and war obligations. The appropriations made the present fiscal year also include large sums for like purposes. Some of these expenditures out of current revenues for the present fiscal year are, in round figures, as follows:

Interest on war savings certificates of 1918	$125,000,000
Railroad Administration	133,000,000
Transportation act	16,000,000
Custom and internal-revenue refunds	140,000,000
War Finance Corporation	125,000,000
Total	539,000,000

While the last of these items can not, perhaps, be charged wholly to war expenditures and conditions, the other items, totaling $414,000,000, are clearly and definitely war costs and war expenditures. The savings certificates were sold during the war period with interest deferred to the time of their final cancellation. Expenditures on account of the railroad administration and the transportation act were to cover war obligations. The refunds were of sums collected and used during the war period. Eliminating these items from the total estimate of this year's expenditures the total is but $3,160,554,132, of which $284,000,000 is for the reduction of the public debt.

We have, in the face of tremendous difficulties, at last reached a position from which we can survey the difficult road over which we have traveled and appraise the splendid results triumphantly achieved. In three years we have reduced the national debt as much as it was reduced between the close of the Civil War and the beginning of the World War. The tax burden has been lifted in the sum of almost a billion dollars per year. The national expenditures, notwithstanding the war overhang, have been decreasing at the rate of approximately a billion dollars a year, until we have reached the point where further reduction can only be made as we eliminate those factors of war expenditure, which fortunately will, in the main, be met during the present fiscal year.

OPERATIONS OF THE APPROPRIATIONS COMMITTEE.

The short session witnessed the first operations of the new consolidated Appropriations Committee under the Budget system in full swing. The House made a record in the matter of the passage of the appropriation bills, the last of the bills having been passed on January 22, more than a month earlier than at any previous session. The bills were well considered in committee and were given rather unusually thorough consideration on the floor of the House. The consolidation of appropriations in one committee has been fully justified by our experience thus far. It makes for the dispatch of business and for the careful consideration and balancing of appropriations. Notwithstanding the fact that one very considerable increase for rivers and harbors was made by the Congress above the Budget estimate, the total appropriations were well within the estimates.

In the fiscal year which closed June 30 last we met all expenditures out of revenues and had a balance of nearly $300,000,000. We should unquestionably have been able to have shown a balance of income over expenditures at the close of the fiscal year which will end June 30 next, notwithstanding other items of war overhang, had it not been for the payment of $125,000,000 interest on war savings certificates above referred to. Eliminating that item, which should not be a charge against current revenues, we should unquestionably show a fine balance at the close of the fiscal year.

GENERAL LEGISLATION.

The work of the Congress has been so tremendous in volume, so important and so diversified in character, that even a brief detailed reference to all of it is impossible within the limits of time at my command. I therefore must content myself with comparatively brief statements with regard to the more outstanding and important measures which have received consideration or have been crystallized into law.

THE BUDGET.

The hopes entertained by those who for many years labored for a budget system, of those on both sides of this Chamber who efficiently served in the enactment of budget legislation, has been abundantly justified by our experience under the Budget thus far. Not only has the Budget Bureau, under the efficient management of its first directors, in harmony with the views of the Chief Executive, asserted a most helpful and beneficial influence over the estimates presented to the Congress, but the directors, with the constant and unfailing support of the President, have exerted a mighty influence for economy over the departments and bureaus and independent establishments of the Government, resulting in the saving of many millions of dollars out of appropriations made before the Budget was established. The Congress, and particularly the House of Representatives, which, after all, is the final arbiter, trimmed the appropriations below even the reduced estimates of the Budget. To a considerable extent this was made possible by the cooperation of the executive departments and by reason of the reductions in the Naval Establishment made possible by the Conference on Limitation of Armament.

THE PEACE RESOLUTION.

The peace resolution declared the end of a state of war, the existence of which was proclaimed by the war declaration. It placed us in a position of official peace with Germany and Austria, and paved the way for the negotiations since entered into for the reestablishment of normal peace relations with our late enemies.

EMERGENCY TARIFF.

The act for an emergency tariff on agricultural products, which was promptly passed and later extended until the permanent tariff took effect, checked the threatened flooding of our markets at a time when the reaction from war prices had brought many of the agricultural products of the country to a price far below the cost of production.

The legislation had a continuous steadying effect, helpful to the producer and beneficial in its effect upon the general business of the country. Since the enactment of this legislation there has been a widely helpful upward trend in the prices, not only of the agricultural products directly affected by the legislation but of a variety of other farm products as well, affording the producer a fair return for his effort and outlay without appreciably affecting the prices paid by the consumer.

It may be truthfully said that this act, together with the loans made to agriculturists and stock raisers under the amended War Finance Corporation act, have been the salvation of the great basic industries of agriculture, and the benefits rendered them have been reflected in improved business conditions generally.

VETERANS' BUREAU ACT.

The act establishing a Veterans' Bureau and consolidating all of the agencies charged with care and responsibility on behalf of the ex-service men was the fulfillment of a national obligation to provide an organization which, so far as it was possible to do so, should cure the delays which had been complained of in meeting our obligations to our national defenders. The bureau is now functioning with increasing efficiency, and notwithstanding the enormous burden placed upon it, looking after the welfare of the more than 300,000 men who are under its care or have applied for its benefits, is continually reducing the cases and the causes of complaint among those whom it serves. Among the last acts of the Congress was a measure amending former acts so as to do full justice to the disabled veterans. The bureau will this calendar year pay to the veterans of the World War and expend for their benefit the stupendous sum of approximately $475,000,000.

HOSPITALS, VETERANS' BUREAU.

Continuing its policy of making every needed provision for the care and comfort of the sick and disabled veterans of the World War, Congress passed the act of April 20, 1922, which authorized appropriations in the sum of $17,000,000 in aiding the Director of the Veterans' Bureau to provide for the construction of additional facilities and to furnish medical, surgical, and hospital services and supplies for persons who served in the World War, Spanish-American War, the Philippine insurrection, and the Boxer rebellion. These funds are in addition to the $18,000,000 provided for similar purposes near the close of the Sixty-sixth Congress, and it is believed that with the sums now made available abundant hospital facilities will be provided for all of the veterans who may seek them.

THE FOREIGN DEBT REFUNDING ACT.

This Congress has had no more important question before it than that of providing for a commission to treat with our foreign debtors and to arrange with them as to the terms of payment of the principal and interest of the foreign debts, amounting to more than $11,000,000,000, which they owe us. Had the former administration proceeded in full conformity with the law, these obligations would have all been funded and time and terms of payment agreed upon, and nothing further would have been necessary. While the Secretaries of the Treasury of the Wilson administration may not have acted contrary to law, they certainly did not carry out the directions and provisions of the law in full, and, on the contrary, did enter into an agreement with our foreign debtors whereby all interest payments were delayed for a period of three years, and the only obligations taken were mere I O U's, with no definite stipulation as to conditions of payment.

In this state of affairs it became necessary to legislate a grant of authority for the handling of this tremendously important matter, involving not only the vast sum of more than $11,000,000,000 but affecting our relations with Armenia, Austria, Belgium, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Esthonia, Finland, France, Great Britain, Greece, Hungary, Italy, Latvia, Liberia, Lithuania, Poland, Rumania, Russia, and Serbia, all of whom owe us sums ranging from a few thousand dollars to hundreds of millions of dollars.

THE BRITISH DEBT.

The legislation created a commission of five members, with the Secretary of the Treasury as chairman. Promptly after the enactment of the legislation the question of terms of settlement and refunding were taken up with certain foreign governments, and the British Government sent a commission of distinguished gentlemen to Washington to take up the negotiations. It soon became apparent that it would be practically impossible to negotiate a settlement under the limitations of the act creating the commission. After a careful consideration of all the questions involved a plan of settlement was tentatively agreed upon, which was approved by the President and presented by him to the Congress in person in a strong and forceful message on February 7, 1923. Two days thereafter the plan recommended by the commission and the President was approved by the House of Representatives. It later received the approval of the Senate and became a law on February 28, 1923.

This settlement of the British debt, on terms fair and reasonable from the standpoint of all concerned, is an occurrence of first importance. It has had and will have a steadying influence on the world's finances; it strengthens the good understanding between the English-speaking peoples, so important to the peace and welfare of the world, and marks the most important step toward the settlement of all of the debts growing out of the Great War.

THE AGRICULTURAL CREDITS ACT OF 1923.

The agricultural credits act of 1923, which was passed during the closing days of Congress, provides for the establishment of two distinct and separate classes of relief for the agricultural interests of the United States. One organization, to be known as "Federal intermediate credit banks," is to be established and operated under the supervision of the Federal Farm Loan Board. The law creating this system provides for 12 separate banks, each with $5,000,000 capital subscribed by the Secretary of the Treasury and paid for out of public funds. These banks are to be located one in each of the Federal land banks, and may be operated under the same management as are the Federal land banks. They are organized to make loans to cooperative marketing associations, associations to be formed by farmers, and are permitted to make advances to banks, cooperative banks, and so forth, making loans for agricultural purposes. These banks, under the supervision of the Federal Farm Loan Board, are authorized to issue and sell debentures when properly secured, as provided for under the law, to the investing public, which debentures are to carry tax-exemption privileges now accorded farm-loan bonds; but at no time can the rate of interest be in excess of 6 per cent per annum.

The second organization, to be known as "National Agricultural Credit Corporations," is created under this same act along lines similar to the law creating national banks. They are created and financed under this law by private initiative and capital. They are permitted to organize with a minimum capital of $250,000; authority is given for the creation of a rediscount bank with a minimum capital of $1,000,000. These national agricultural credit corporations are permitted to subscribe up to 20 per cent of their capital to the stock of the rediscount banks; they are also permitted to issue acceptances or debentures, but these do not carry the tax-exemption privileges. They are to be under the supervision of the Comptroller of the Currency. There is also a provision in this law authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to license appraisers. These appraisers will be used more particularly in connection with cattle loans.

The operation of this dual system, a part of which is financed by the Government and the other part by private capital, should, if properly managed, take care of the needs of agriculture to the fullest extent and will ultimately mean the gradual liquidation of the War Finance Corporation.

ACT FOR THE RETURN OF ALIEN PROPERTIES.

On October 16, 1917, Congress passed a trading with the enemy act making it unlawful, except upon certain conditions, to trade with an alien enemy or ally of such enemy. The office of the Alien Property Custodian was created with power to seize all property and money in the United States belonging to an enemy alien or ally of such.

Under this act and certain amendments thereto the Alien Property Custodian came into possession of property belonging to nonresident enemy aliens aggregating in value about $350,000,000, embraced in about 30,000 claims or trusts.

Before the United States entered into the World War many of our citizens had been killed by the German forces and many millions of dollars of American property had been destroyed, all in violation of the well-established principles of international law relative to the rights of neutrals.

Germany in the treaty of Versailles assumed the payment of claims based on such losses. We did not, however, become a signatory to that treaty, but the technical state of war between Germany and the United States was brought to an end by the peace resolution of July 2, 1921, in which it was declared that we reserved for our nationals any and all rights, and so forth, under the armistice, or to which they would have become rightfully entitled under the treaty of Versailles.

Section 5 of the resolution provided that the property which had come into possession of the Alien Property Custodian should be retained by this Government, except as provided by law, until the enemy governments had made suitable provision for the satisfaction of all claims against said governments on behalf of American citizens through the acts of enemy forces.

While under international law and the treaties and resolutions above referred to the United States would undoubtedly be justified in holding alien property for the satisfaction of American claims, such action is not contemplated, and it has been the purpose of our Government to return this property as soon as such action could be taken without jeopardizing a reasonably speedy adjustment and settlement of American claims. While, therefore, it is the purpose of our Government to return all of this property within a reasonable time, it did not seem wise or opportune to make an effort to return it all at this time. Such action might be misunderstood by the German members of the mixed commission now engaged in the settlement of claims and by both sides in the present controversy over the occupancy of the Ruhr.

On the other hand, our Government and Congress were anxious to relieve those of small means, the holding of whose property was a real hardship, and therefore the bill as reported provided that not more than $10,000 in value should be returned to any one person. It is estimated that the act making provision for such return will result in the transfer of about 90 per cent of the 30,000 trusts and will give the claimants in the neighborhood of $40,000,000, leaving approximately $300,000,000 in larger trusts to be returned later.

APPROPRIATION FOR THE INVESTIGATION AND PROSECUTION OF WAR FRAUDS.

The enormous operations of the Government during the war afforded abundant opportunity for fraud, and investigations made by the war investigating committees of the Sixty-sixth Congress made it very evident that many had taken advantage of the opportunities to defraud the Government, and that there had been much carelessness in the settlement of war claims. The investigation of these matters by the War Department and the Department of Justice, the auditing of accounts, and the examination of records has proven a slow and tedious proceeding, particularly in view of the fact that records were in many cases poorly kept and in some cases had been removed. While very excellent progress has been made, it became evident that increased appropriations were necessary if this work were to be carried on thoroughly and with promptness and dispatch. The Congress therefore provided an additional appropriation of $500,000 to be expended in the discretion of the Attorney General for the investigation and prosecution of war frauds. Under this appropriation the Attorney General's office has been proceeding with great vigor in the prosecution of war frauds and cases of an allied and similar character. Some of the best talent in the country has been engaged for this work, and investigations, inquiries, and prosecutions are proceeding vigorously.

UNITED STATES COAL COMMISSION.

For some months past the Nation has been passing through a trying situation growing out of the difficulties and differences attending wage adjustments. Happily these difficulties seem to be in the way of settlement, and in the coal-mining industries peace again reigns, and we are rapidly approaching a normal output. Unfortunately there are those who would take advantage of the people's needs in the condition growing out of the long period of nonproduction, and the Nation is confronted with the menace of conscienceless profiteering in the sale of coal.

In the address of the President delivered before a joint session of the two Houses of Congress on August 18, 1922, and in which he called to the attention of the Congress the industrial situation of the country, the President recommended, among other things, the creation of "a commission to make a searching investigation into the whole coal industry, with provision for its lawful activities and the bestowal of authority to reveal every phase of coal production, sale, and distribution." Such a commission, to consist of seven members and clothed with authority as suggested by the President, has been provided.

It is believed that the information which the commission secures and presents in its report will be most helpful and useful in the consideration of the many questions and problems which require study and solution in connection with the industry, in the interest of those engaged in it and of the general public, which has so lively an interest in the matter of fuel supply. After the commission had gotten well under way with its work it developed that the problems presented were even more complex and difficult than had been anticipated and that any intelligent and informing report would require the gathering of a wide variety and a large amount of information. With a view of enabling the commission to carry on and complete its work in the best possible manner an additional appropriation was made in the closing days of the Congress for that purpose.

ADDITIONAL UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGES.

Soon after taking office Attorney General Daugherty created a voluntary commission to inquire into the question of relieving the United States district courts of the congestion which was steadily increasing. This commission, after studying the situation, recommended authorization for the appointment of two district judges at large in each judicial circuit—18 in all. They were to be designated and assigned to districts from time to time to assist the resident judges in disposing of the arrears of business.

There has been but little difference of opinion as to the necessity for additional judges, but after careful consideration it was finally determined that the additional judges should be assigned to particular districts. The legislation as enacted provides for 24 additional district judges. It also provides for annual conferences, to be called by the Chief Justice, of the senior circuit judges of each judicial circuit, which conferences are to make a comprehensive survey of the condition of business in the courts of the United States and prepare plans for assignment and transfer of judges to or from circuits or districts as the condition of the public business before the courts may suggest and require.

Most of the new judges have been appointed and are at work, and, notwithstanding the great activity of the Department of Justice in the bringing of new cases, it is hoped and believed that the present congested condition of the court dockets of the country will be speedily relieved.

FEDERAL HIGHWAY ACTS.

The Federal highway act, which became a law November 9 as an amendment to the Federal aid act, carried out the President's recommendations with regard to needed and essential changes in the Federal road aid act, particularly with a view to centralizing authority in the States and insuring the upkeep of Federal aid roads. The act made an appropriation of $75,000,000 for Federal aid in road building for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1922, and of $5,000,000 for forest roads and trails for the same fiscal year, and $10,000,000 for the same purposes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923. This was a measure of the highest importance. It provided much-needed amendments to the Federal road aid act and insured the continuance of Federal aid and participation in road building throughout the country.

On the 1st of May, 1922, the House passed a bill further amending the Federal highway act and authorizing highway appropriations in the sum of $65,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923; $75,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924; also authorizing appropriations for forest roads and trails in the sum of $6,500,000 for the fiscal year 1924. The Senate did not, however, consider this bill, but placed provisions for highway appropriations on the Post Office appropriation bill. For these provisions the House substituted its bill of May 1, and in conference appropriations for highways were authorized in the sum of $50,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923; $65,000,000 for 1924; and $75,000,000 for 1925; $6,500,000 was also authorized for forest roads and trails for each of the fiscal years 1924 and 1925. The Federal highway act was amended in several important particulars in the interest of economy and proper maintenance, and cooperation by the Federal Government was limited to $16,250 per mile, exclusive of bridges, for the year 1923 and $15,000 per mile thereafter.

THE STOCKMEN AND FARMERS' WAR FINANCE ACT.

The act amending the legislation creating the War Finance Corporation to provide relief for producers of and dealers in agricultural products has had a highly beneficial effect upon the industries which it directly aids and upon the entire country. It may be said without exaggeration that this legislation has been the salvation of the live-stock industry of the West. It has preserved from bankruptcy industries essential to the prosperity of the entire Nation. Under this act more than $300,000,000 has been advanced to the farmers, the stock growers, and the agricultural producers of the Nation on a sound business basis, as evidenced by the fact that more than $149,000,000 of the original loans have been repaid and that the corporation presents every evidence of soundness in its operation. The recent extension of this act assures the country of its benefits until permanent provision can be made for farm and live-stock credits under the new agricultural credits act, which will soon be in operation. The agricultural credit and rediscount cooperation provided for in this act will largely provide the credit facilities now afforded by the War Finance Corporation.

MATERNITY AND INFANCY ACT.

The Republican platform declared "the supreme duty of the Nation is the conservation of human resources through an enlightened measure of social and industrial justice." The President, having in mind this party declaration of national duty, in his message to Congress at the beginning of the session said:

> I assume that the maternity bill, already strongly approved, will be enacted promptly, thus adding to our manifestation of human interest.

There was considerable difference of opinion with regard to this measure in the Congress and in the country, both as to the policy it invoked and with regard to its provisions. The newly enfranchised women voters, so far as their views were expressed, were almost unanimously favorable to the measure. It appealed to the conscience and sympathy of all as a measure asserting national leadership for the purpose of stimulating the States and communities in the tremendously important work of the protection of maturity and infancy. The act provides for cooperation between the National Government and the several States and authorizes an appropriation of approximately $1,500,000 for the current fiscal year, which may be increased in the sum of $1,000,000 a year for five years.

The measure as reported by the committee and passed by the House differed quite materially from the bill as it passed the Senate, and the bill as thus amended was promptly adopted by the Senate. The enactment of this measure is not only creditable to the Congress as "adding to our manifestation of human interest," as stated by the President in his message, but as a prompt fulfillment of our platform pledges. Both parties in the last campaign made promises to the new voters, the better half of mankind newly invited into participation in government. Those promises have been kept, at least partially, and so far as they were definitely made in platforms and in presidential statements, by the passage of this act under which we encourage the States and cooperate with them in the highly important, splendid, and humanitarian work of the protection of maternity and infancy.

INDEPENDENT CITIZENSHIP FOR WOMEN.

For years there has been more or less agitation for the amendment of our laws relating to citizenship and naturalization with a view of authorizing the naturalization of alien women independent of the naturalization of their husbands and for the retention by American women of their citizenship, notwithstanding marriage to an alien, so long as she desires so to do and remains a resident of the United States. Since women were granted the franchise the demand for and the desirability of legislation of this character has increased, and one of the last acts of the session was the final adoption of legislation of this character. The act relating to the naturalization and citizenship of married women provides for the recognition of alien married women who desire and are qualified to become American citizens by permitting them to become naturalized without waiting for the naturalization of their husbands. It provides against the automatic loss of an American woman's citizenship by her marriage to an alien, and for the restoration to citizenship of such women who have heretofore lost their citizenship by such marriages.

IMMIGRATION RESTRICTION ACT.

The immigration restriction act provides in a practical and workable way for the staying of the great volume of the tide of immigration threatened as an after effect of the war. While America regrets to close her gates even partially against those who in good faith and with good intentions seek our shores, this measure was necessary as a means of preventing a flood tide of immigration, not all of a desirable character and beyond our capacity to speedily assimilate.

The gates of free America have always swung open for the oppressed of all lands, for those seeking to better their conditions, and we desire to keep them open, provided, however, that we shall not allow this flood to come more rapidly than we can assimilate the newcomers to the ideas and ideals of true Americanism, the principles of liberty under laws. For the time being we have restricted the coming immigrants, welcoming as many as we believe to be safe for America, and we stand ready again to widen the door of opportunity when we may be able thoroughly to Americanize a larger number of well-intentioned people who may seek a home among us.

It was inevitable that there should be difficulty in the administration of the new law and that, with large numbers of European peoples anxious to come to America, great pressure would be exerted to exceed the quotas of certain countries and much heartburning and hardship result. All of this is regrettable. An earnest effort was made to afford at least a measure of relief to those most anxious to cast their lot with our people. But it was found difficult to reconcile wide differences of opinion and impossible to greatly relieve the situation without largely abandoning the policy of restriction which had been adopted. It is to be hoped that in the no-distant future conditions at home and abroad may justify the liberalizing of the present immigration laws to a reasonable extent.

RECOGNITION OF AGRICULTURE IN FEDERAL RESERVE ACT.

The Federal reserve act provides that the President, in making appointment of members of the Federal Reserve Board, shall have due regard to a fair representation of the financial, industrial, and commercial interests of the country. Inasmuch as agriculture is the basic industry of the country, failure to recognize this as one of the industries entitled to representation on the board seemed an extraordinary oversight. The act approved June 3, 1922, remedies this situation by providing that in the appointment of members of the Federal Reserve Board the "President shall have due regard to a fair representation of the financial, agricultural, industrial, and commercial" interests of the country. The act also increases the appointive membership of the board to six, and otherwise amends the Federal reserve act.

THE PACKERS ACT.

The so-called packers act, to regulate interstate and foreign commerce in live stock and dairy products, poultry, and eggs, is a wise, sound, and sensible measure. The enactment of this legislation was a distinct triumph, one of the most notable achievements of the Congress, for it gave the country the benefit of sound legislation affecting the meat-packing and allied and associated industries and activities after previous Congresses had struggled in vain with these questions, largely because of the radical, experimental character of the legislation that had been urged. Notwithstanding the fact that the legislation as enacted was severely criticized by those who had been vainly seeking radical legislation, it has worked so well and been so highly beneficial that it has compelled the indorsement of those who were at one time its severest critics.

ANTIGAMBLING IN GRAIN FUTURES ACT.

The bill for regulating transactions in grain for future delivery, which became a law August 21, 1921, was held unconstitutional by the Supreme Court of the United States on the 15th of May, 1922, as to section 4, the court holding against the provision for the regulation of exchanges by taxation. On June 1 of this year a bill was introduced with a view of meeting the objections of the Supreme Court and yet so regulating the transactions of grain exchanges as to eliminate purely speculative and gambling operations. This bill was taken up by the House and passed on June 26. The legislation as to some of its features, at least, has been vigorously opposed, but it is believed that its enactment, while making possible all legitimate transactions, will prevent those gambling operations which frequently disastrously affect the prices of grain and foodstuffs.

ASSOCIATION OF PRODUCERS OF AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS.

This measure is intended to authorize producers of agricultural products to form associations for the purpose of collectively preparing and marketing their products. Associations for this purpose have become very common in many of the States, but the States can not confer any right upon their organizations to engage in interstate or foreign commerce. While this measure confers on farmers certain privileges it can not properly be said to be class legislation. Business corporations have under existing legislation all the powers and privileges conferred on farm organizations by this legislation. The organizations authorized are under the supervision of the Secretary of Agriculture, and it is believed that through the operations of organizations of this kind it may be possible to eliminate unnecessary middlemen, to improve conditions of marketing, and, while assuring the producer a reasonable price, protect the consumer against the high prices which he has frequently paid for products for which the producer received little.

IRRIGATION DISTRICTS—FARM LOANS ON RECLAMATION PROJECTS.

We have long needed a Federal law providing for the organization of irrigation districts on projects under the national reclamation law, in order to make it possible for the Federal authorities to deal with the settlers and water users collectively instead of individually. This is now made possible by the act of May 15, 1922. This act also provides for the conditions under which farm loans can be made on lands on reclamation projects, thus meeting a long-felt want on the part of settlers on such projects.

EXTENDING THE TIME OF PAYMENTS OF CHARGES DUE ON RECLAMATION PROJECTS.

The Federal Government has been engaged approximately 20 years in the work of the reclamation of arid lands. In this period considerably more than $100,000,000 have been expended. A very considerable sum has been repaid. The works erected are many of them of monumental character and among the finest engineering accomplishments of man. In the main the settlers under these projects have been prosperous and successful, but a series of years of low prices and high freight rates have created a condition under which many of the settlers find it temporarily impossible to meet their payments. With a view of remedying this condition an act extending the time of certain payments under carefully guarded conditions was enacted.

It is realized by all that the time has now arrived when there should be a general study of conditions on the reclamation projects and a readjustment of payments in the light of present conditions in a manner to enable the industrious and well-meaning settler to meet his obligations at all times and to place these enterprises on a basis of permanent prosperity. Such provisions should be made in the near future, the legislation above referred to being merely temporary in its relief.

THE ANTINARCOTICS ACT.

It has become increasingly evident that drastic legislation is essential to the control of the growing evil of the use of narcotics. The act providing for a Federal Narcotic Control Board, making it unlawful to import narcotics, except such as are necessary for medicinal and other legitimate purposes, fixing heavy penalties for violation of the provisions of the act, will, it is believed, have a helpful and beneficial effect in reducing the importation and use of narcotics.

LIMITING THE PRODUCTION OF HABIT-FORMING NARCOTIC DRUGS.

The good people of the world have been shocked and greatly agitated over the great increase, or at least the apparent great increase, in the use of habit-forming drugs. It is realized by all who have made a study of this important subject that it is not only the duty of all civilized peoples to use every possible means to reduce the use of such drugs but that it is absolutely essential to the existence of civilization to have this menace checked in its threatening spread and growth. With this end in view it is proposed to strike at the root of the evil by limiting the production of these habit-forming drugs and the plants from which they are made, and the resolution in question provides for international action limiting such production. Much is hoped for out of the movement thus inaugurated toward ridding the world of this evil.

THE NAVAL SCRAPPING ACT.

The entire world has sung the praises of the great accomplishment of the Conference on the Limitation of Armaments in putting an end to the mad rush of competitive naval expansion and construction. Its effect is reflected in the reduction of the personnel of our Navy and a decrease of one hundred and twenty-five millions in naval appropriations. The so-called naval scrapping bill gave legislative effect to the provisions of the treaty on the limitation of naval armament. It authorized the President to take the steps necessary to make the terms of the treaty effective by scrapping a portion of the ships now under construction, which are not to be completed, and authorized the conversion of two of them into great airplane carriers.

The nations which joined in the Conference on the Limitation of Armaments have all ratified or taken steps looking to the ratification of the treaties signed at the conference, and the world has accepted the theory of limitation. Quite recently an appropriation was made for the purpose of completing the scrapping and conversion program, and the naval appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1924 still further reflects the economies made possible by the Conference on the Limitation of Armaments.

READJUSTMENT OF PAY—ARMY, NAVY, ETC.

Temporary increases in pay which had been granted to certain men of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps expired July 1, 1922. It therefore became necessary to make some provision to meet this situation, and the act of June 10, 1922, readjusted the pay and allowances of the commissioned and enlisted personnel of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, Coast and Geodetic Survey, and Public Health Service. These readjustments were in accordance with the report made by a joint commission of the two Houses, the Members of which gave careful and painstaking consideration to the involved and confusing provisions of law relative to the pay of these establishments and recommended a measure which is believed to be fair and equitable and which reduces somewhat the aggregate pay of the services.

EMPLOYEES IN PATENT OFFICE—INCREASED PAY.

The act of February 18, 1922, provided needed and essential amendments to the patent laws. It provided for a reclassification and granted a substantial increase in the pay of the employees of the office. This legislation was urged with very great vigor by the patent attorneys of the country and others familiar with the situation, and has cured a condition with regard to which there was much complaint.

MONTHLY PAYMENTS OF PENSIONS.

Civil War pensioners have for some time petitioned the Congress that their pensions be paid monthly instead of quarterly and Congress has responded by making provisions to that effect. This increase in the frequency of payment is very much appreciated, particularly by those pensioners who have little or no means other than their pensions. The change has resulted in a considerably increased cost, but this is justified in view of the benefits conferred on the pensioners.

AID FOR STARVING RUSSIA.

The country responded enthusiastically to the action of the Congress in making an appropriation of $20,000,000 out of the funds of the United States Grain Corporation to purchase corn, seed grain, and preserved milk for the relief of the starving people of Russia. In the administration of this law the Secretary of Commerce secured the cooperation of the authorities in Russia by a very substantial supplemental contribution and in the furnishing of transportation, so that the American relief was even vastly more effective and helpful than it otherwise would have been. This contribution undoubtedly saved the lives of great numbers of people, stayed the spread of pestilence, and aided in the restoration of vast areas, particularly in the Volga Valley.

Congress by the act of January 20, 1922, also authorized the President to transfer medical and hospital supplies from the War Department for the relief of the distressed people of Russia.

THE ANTIBEER ACT.

The so-called Volstead antibeer bill became necessary as a result of an eleventh-hour decision by Attorney General Palmer the day before the close of the Wilson administration. While there has been much sharp difference of opinion with regard to the provisions of the measure, it is believed that the bill is a fair compromise, maintaining the national faith in the enforcement of the prohibition act, while guarding against the possibilities of abuses of power and authority.

FUNDS FOR FARM LOAN BOARD.

The bill making provision for an additional Treasury deposit of $25,000,000 for the Farm Loan Board makes available for that important farm loan agency a total working capital of $50,000,000, and places the Farm Loan Board and banks for the first time since their organization in position to function continuously in the making of loans to the farmers of the Nation. The operations of the farm-loan banks will be greatly enlarged and extended under the new rural credits act of 1923. In the field of farm or real estate loans, in which the banks are now exclusively operating, the new act affords them additional facilities and greater freedom of operation and will enlarge their field by the increase of the maximum loan from $10,000 to $25,000.

FACILITATING EXPORTS.

The amendment to the Edge bill, providing for the promotion of export trade by facilitating the organization of corporations, was intended to and has very greatly aided, assisted, and facilitated the organization and the operation of those useful agencies.

TELEPHONE ACT.

The bill providing for a much-needed consolidation of independent telephone companies rendered possible the reorganization whereby the losses through unwise duplication have been eliminated or greatly reduced, under which more satisfactory systems and more favorable rates should be secured.

CABLE ACT.

The bill under which the President is authorized to provide for the orderly and controlled landing of submarine cables remedied a situation which had greatly embarrassed the former administration and established a policy under which proper national control of these important agencies of communication is established.

COLORADO RIVER BILL.

The bill providing for an agreement among the Western States for the disposition and apportionment of the waters of the Colorado River is an important measure, marking a new and beneficial policy in the settlement of the vexed questions arising out of the use of the waters of interstate streams for the purpose of irrigation. The famous Kansas-Colorado case is the most important of the suits that have been before the courts testing the question of the relative rights of the various States in the arid region where irrigation is practiced to the waters of an interstate stream. It is much better, where it is possible, to have an adjustment and settlement of these questions in advance of the appropriation and use of the waters than to wait until rival claims have been established and then settle the vexed questions, frequently at great loss to those who have expended money in irrigation enterprises.

AMENDMENT OF WAR MINERALS RELIEF ACT.

The act for the relief of those who had responded to the call of the Government departments for the production of war minerals and who were subject to losses by the sudden termination of the war was so narrowly construed by the commission authorized to adjudicate claims under it that it became necessary to broaden somewhat the provisions of the act, or, rather, to enact in more definite language what was the intention of Congress in the first instance. The passage of this act will relieve many worthy claimants of small means who responded patriotically to the request of the Government for the production of war minerals.

APPROPRIATIONS TO MEET CROP FAILURES IN THE NORTHWEST.

The act of March 20, 1922, made an appropriation of $1,500,000 for the purpose of purchasing seed grain to be supplied to the farmers in certain areas of the Northwest where there had been successive crop failures and where the new settlers were likely to be compelled to leave their homes unless given some aid. There was a limit of $300 on the loan that might be made to any one farmer under this act. This appropriation has unquestionably been of very great benefit and will undoubtedly prevent what would have been a quite general temporary abandonment of considerable regions in the Northwest.

AUSTRIAN RELIEF.

By the act of April 6, 1922, the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to extend for a period not to exceed 25 years the time of payment of the principal and interest of the debt incurred by Austria for the purchase of flour from the United States Grain Corporation.

HOMESTEAD RIGHTS FOR EX-SERVICE MEN.

The act of April 7, 1922, provided that veterans of the World War who, because of physical disabilities due to service, were unable to return to their homesteads might make final proof without further residence or improvements and receive a patent for their land.

Public Resolution 36 grants preferred rights of homestead entry for 90 days to ex-service men in case of the opening of lands, which can only be defeated by valid prior settlement rights, and the act of April 6, 1922, provides that the time during which an honorably discharged soldier of the World War shall be receiving treatment for injuries received or disabilities incurred in the line of duty shall be deducted from the time of residence required on a homestead.

ECONOMY IN PUBLIC PRINTING.

Public Resolution 57, which became a law on May 11, 1922, ended waste in Federal printing and fixed the status of desirable Government publications, saving millions of dollars annually.

ACT PROVIDING FOR INTERCHANGEABLE MILEAGE BOOKS.

There has long been a demand for interchangeable mileage books, and an act making provision for such a book passed the Senate in January. The act as amended in the House provides for interchangeable mileage or scrip coupon tickets good for passenger carriage upon the passenger trains on roads subject to the interstate commerce act.

OTHER MEASURES OF IMPORTANCE.

Among other measures of interest and importance that were considered by the Congress and enacted into law may be mentioned the following:

The United States cotton standards act.

The butter standard act.

The American Battle Monuments Commission, providing for a commission to erect memorials commemorating the services of American soldiers in Europe.

The resolution relative to the establishment of a national military park at Yorktown, Va.

BILLS WHICH HAVE PASSED THE HOUSE.

In addition to the bills which have become laws the House has passed 144 bills. It would be impossible in the course of a speech of any reasonable length to even give the titles of all of these measures. Many of them are measures of great importance and their preparation and consideration involved an earnest and faithful effort on the part of the House and its committees. I shall refer only to a few of them by title:

The shipping bill.

The antilynching bill.

The railroad refunding bill.

The blue-sky securities bill.

Bill to prevent corrupt trade practices.

Bill for the revision and codification of the Federal statutes.

Bill regulating radio communication.

Bill providing for standard measures for fruits and vegetables.

Bill to prevent the manufacture of adulterated and misbranded food and drugs.

Bill for the improvement of the foreign service.

Bill for appraisal of tribal property of Indians.

Bill for the incorporation of the Grand Army of the Republic.

Bill to incorporate disabled American veterans of the World War.

Bill excluding from the mails fraudulent devices.

Bill providing regulations for promoting the welfare of American seamen in merchant marine on vessels on the Great Lakes.

Bill relating to compensation for injuries or death of Federal employees in the District of Columbia.

Bill for the relief of certain officers of the United States Army.

Naval omnibus bill.

Bill to establish standard of weights and measures for wheat-mill and corn-mill products.

Joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States relative to tax-free securities.

SENATE FILIBUSTERS.

I desire to keep within the proper limits of debate in discussing the failure of the Senate to pass upon tremendously important legislation which has been considered by the House. This failure arises, as everyone knows, out of the fact that a majority of the Senate can not bring debate to an end and compel a vote on pending legislation.

It ought to be in order to discuss in debate in the House a rule of the Senate which prevents legislation, or rather the lack of a rule in the Senate which would allow the majority to enact legislation, and that is particularly so in view of the fact that in the closing days of the Congress the habit of filibuster in that body developed into a filibuster against the House, because it had not enacted a certain bill sent over from the Senate—a bill local in its operation and exceedingly questionable in its character, proposing to put Uncle Sam in the business of a retailer of certain kinds of fertilizer. The extraordinary character of that filibuster is evidenced by the impressive list of highly important legislation passed by the House which had received no consideration by the Senate or, having been considered, was not allowed to come to a vote.

EFFECT ON GENERAL LEGISLATION OF LACK OF A SENATE CLOTURE.

It ought to be in order in the House to discuss rules or lack of rules in the Senate under which a minority, and frequently a small minority, of the Senate can prevent action on highly important legislation which the House has considered. It would not be proper to indulge in criticism on the judgment expressed by the Senate touching legislation, originating in either the House or the Senate. But it is quite a different matter when the rules of one of the branches of a legislative body, or the lack of rule, prevents consideration and final judgment by one body of the legislation originating in the other.

The Senate filibuster of this short session was made against the shipping bill. No Member of the House of Representatives would be justified in criticizing in the House any action the Senate might take on that highly important measure, but it is quite another matter when the rules of the Senate allow a minority to prevent the expression of an opinion by a vote, and that is particularly true in view of the fact that the filibuster against the shipping bill prevented consideration by the Senate of many important measures passed by the House, a partial list of which I have just given.

There was an abundance of time for the consideration of all of these measures, for but little time is consumed in the Senate on the appropriation bills, the consideration of which consumes a large portion of the time of the House, and yet these measures, with the exception of the shipping bill, were never called up for consideration. There was no opportunity in the face of a persistent filibuster against the shipping bill. Furthermore, if I am not trespassing on forbidden ground, may I call attention to the fact that a condition of chronic filibuster in the Senate renders it exceedingly difficult, if not entirely impossible, to give proper consideration in that body to many measures, which thus reach the House from the Senate in very different form than they would be likely to present had the Senate, free from the presence of a filibuster, had abundant opportunity for their consideration.

MEASURES WHICH DID NOT SECURE FINAL ACTION.

CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT—NORRIS RESOLUTION.

There was considerable criticism voiced in certain quarters because a joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States fixing the commencement of the terms of the President, the Vice President, and Members of Congress, and fixing the time of the assembling of Congress, sometimes referred to as the Norris resolution, was not approved by the House of Representatives, and in view of the importance of the questions involved it is perhaps proper that some reference should be made to this matter.

When the resolution in question was introduced in the Senate it was not referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, which has jurisdiction of such matters in the Senate, but to the Committee on Agriculture. This is a highly important committee of distinguished Senators, but just why it should be given charge of constitutional amendments I have never learned.

On February 12 Senator NORRIS called the resolution up. There was some little discussion, claims being asserted on behalf of several Senators for the paternity of the proposal to amend the Constitution along the lines suggested. On the following day there was a few moments' further discussion, after which the resolution, in an amended form, was adopted. The resolution reached the House of Representatives on February 14 and was referred to the Committee on Election of President, Vice President, and Representatives in Congress. There remained only about two weeks before the close of the session, with the calendars of the House crowded with much important pending legislation.

Almost immediately after the resolution was adopted by the Senate it was discovered that the proposed constitutional amendment, if adopted, would give the country two sets of Representatives and Senators from the first Monday in January to the 4th of March and two Presidents and Vice Presidents from the third Monday in January to the 4th of March of the year in which it went into effect. These defects were considered by the House committee to which the resolution was referred, and on the 22d of February the chairman of the House committee placed in the basket what purported to be a report of the committee proposing an amendment to the Constitution treating of the same subject matter, but in entirely different form.

This new form evidenced the fear of its proponents that the period between the general elections and the proposed new date for the beginning of a Congress and of the terms of the President and Vice President was too brief, by providing in section 3 a new and novel provision for the presidential succession in case the question of such succession as now provided for by the Constitution had not been settled on the date fixed in the new constitutional amendment.

Mr. BULWINKLE, of North Carolina, a member of the committee which had the resolution before it, filed his views as a member of the committee, declaring that at the time the so-called report was ordered but 5 members of the committee of 13 were present in the room and only 5 members voted, and that therefore the committee had not, as a matter of fact, reported the resolution. Mr. BULWINKLE further called attention to a number of important questions to be considered in connection with any proposed change of the Constitution affecting the terms of the President and Vice President and Members of Congress; to the importance of these questions and the fact that the committee had not given full consideration to them.

The House did not consider the resolution for a variety of reasons. First, it could not have been considered under the rules of the House, because it was not regularly reported out of the committee; second, very few Members of the House believed it advisable to attempt to consider so important a matter so late in the session when so little consideration had been or could be given to it; and third, the condition of the business of the House was such that several of the important measures which became laws the last two days of the session would have been jeopardized, if not defeated, if time had been given for the consideration of this resolution.

ACTION TO LENGTHEN SESSION ESSENTIAL.

Beyond all question it is highly important that the Congress at the very earliest opportunity take such action as may be necessary to lengthen the present so-called short session. That session, beginning the first Monday in December and ending on the 4th of March, is altogether too brief a period for the consideration of the very great volume and variety of business which in these latter days comes before the Congress. In making this proposed change it will probably be best to have the newly elected Congress begin its sessions as soon as may be wisely and safely provided after the elections and to propose such constitutional amendment as will fit such a program. If, however, the term of the new Congress is to begin in the early part of January, it would seem necessary, or at least wise, to advance the date of the general elections.

In this connection it would also be well to give consideration to the question of changing the fiscal year for which appropriations are made to correspond with the calendar year. The very many advantages of such a change will be apparent to anyone familiar with Government business and expenditures. The ending and beginning of appropriations in midsummer presents a most serious and trying problem to most of the Government departments and results in inevitable loss and confusion in organization and expenditure in many lines of public activity.

MUSCLE SHOALS.

Our friends on the Democratic side of the Chamber took occasion from time to time to indulge in severe criticism of the Republican majority because of failure to consider in the House the proposed legislation dealing with the Government property and enterprise in the vicinity of Muscle Shoals, and particularly what is known as the Henry Ford offer relative to that project. The matter was not considered in the House for a variety of reasons, any one of which was sufficient to justify the failure to give time for the consideration of the questions involved. The first and most important reason why the measure was not brought up for consideration related to the question of time. The House was in almost continuous session from the beginning of the special session, which began November 20, until the 4th of March, and the essential business before the Congress was disposed of with energy and dispatch. It is true that brief filibusters occurring from time to time, largely through action of those claiming to be friendly to Mr. Ford's Muscle Shoals offer, consumed enough time to have given a day or more to the consideration of this question, but otherwise there was not a day that could have been spared without jeopardizing important measures, several of which became a law in the closing hours of the Congress. Second, it was generally admitted that under no circumstances could the fate of Muscle Shoals and the plants and enterprises embraced under that term be settled in the present Congress. If the House could have composed its widely differing views, there was no possibility of action by the Senate, and therefore the discussion would have been largely academic. The only possible purpose it could have served would have been to clarify the situation or further becloud and confuse it, as the case might be. Third, under appropriations and authorizations amounting to nearly $25,000,000 for construction work on the so-called Wilson Dam and appurtenances, the expenditure of which out of Government funds was contemplated in the Ford offer, the enterprise is being carried forward as rapidly as could be done under any circumstances, and therefore however this plant may be eventually utilized no time is being lost because the Ford offer had not been considered.

Near the close of the second session I stated that I hoped that before the Congress expired we should have an opportunity to discuss Mr. Ford's offer touching Muscle Shoals, and I regret that there was not sufficient time which might have been utilized for that purpose during the short session without interfering with or jeopardizing other important legislation. While I am very confident that we could not have settled the question, I think we might have clarified the situation, and it might have been possible to have silenced some of the ceaseless din of apparently willful misstatement with regard to the character of the Ford offer and what might be hoped for or expected under it, which has been kept going by certain individuals and organizations.

In view of the fact, however, that the chorus of misstatement and of false propaganda with regard to the Ford offer has continued and has even been echoed in Congress, notwithstanding repeated proof of the utter lack of sound basis for the statements made, I am not sure that anything that may be said or done can put an end to this continuous clamor of error; perhaps time only can cure it.

THE FORD OFFER NO GUARANTY.

Mr. Ford offers to pay the Government $5,000,000 for property which cost the Government over $100,000,000, including the Gorgas steam plant, in no wise an essential part of the Muscle Shoals property, on which the Alabama Power Co. has a claim, and for which that company agrees to pay $2,500,000. Under Mr. Ford's offer the Government must complete the Wilson Dam at a cost of $25,000,000 and Mr. Ford demands use and control of the dam for 100 years on the payment of 4 per cent interest on the additional sums we shall put into it. Under the water power act no other applicant secures water power for more than 50 years.

The clamor on behalf of the Ford offer is predicated almost wholly on the entirely groundless assertion that if the Ford offer is accepted Mr. Ford will furnish the farmers of the country with cheap fertilizer. It is amazing how persistently these misstatements are reiterated nothwithstanding the fact that a reading of the Ford offer makes it very clear that Mr. Ford makes no pledge or promise of cheap fertilizer. Mr. Ford offers to utilize a part of the plant for the manufacture of fertilizer providing he can make 8 per cent on his investment. It is not necessary for the Government to give away $100,000,000 worth of property in order to get people to engage in business on an 8 per cent return.

The fact is that if the Ford offer were made by any one but Henry Ford it would be smothered in ridicule. The only possible explanation for the attitude of certain gentlemen favorable to the Ford offer is that they are exceedingly anxious to have a great industrial center established in the section in which Muscle Shoals is located, and they are perfectly willing to have the Government make a contribution of $100,000,000 and grant a 100-year lease on ridiculously favorable terms to the lessee on one of the greatest water-power plants of the country in order to establish and build up such a great industrial center. They must know that the Ford offer is absurd in its proposed transfer of great properties and great opportunities without reasonable return or any proper safeguarding of the public interest. The claim that the farmer would be assured of cheap fertilizer has no basis whatever in the Ford offer.

The Committee on Military Affairs, which considered this matter, has 21 members, and not to exceed 2 members of that committee seem to be disposed to accept the Ford offer without amendment. The bill reported by a majority of the committee modified the Ford offer by the elimination of the Gorgas plant, and in a letter dated May 31, 1922, Mr. Ford stated that he could not consent to the elimination of this plant and that if it were eliminated he would understand that his offer was refused.

The Government has a great investment in and around Muscle Shoals, which must be safeguarded in the interest of all the people. A part, at least, of the power generated there should be held available for the manufacture of nitrates in case of war. It may be that the Government will not be able to realize any considerable sum on its war investment, but there should be no difficulty in securing adequate returns for the power when developed, and if the Government is to make a liberal agreement that liberal agreement should be reflected in a definite pledge and contract to serve the public interest, including the manufacture and sale of fertilizers at a low cost. Mr. Ford made no such pledge.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA LEGISLATION.

The present legislative plan under which the Congress is the board of aldermen for the District of Columbia is not a satisfactory one, but in the midst of conflicting opinion on the subject I shall content myself with a brief reference to the situation, without suggesting a cure.

The District of Columbia, in common with the entire country, suffers from the short session, and therefore has as great an interest as any part of the country in the making of wise and well-considered provision for a change in the sessions of the Congress. In the present session it was necessary to first pass the appropriation bills and then to enact the legislation of a public character for which there was a nation-wide demand, and the legislation without which a special session of the Congress would have been likely, if not essential.

The work of the House proceeded with diligence; nevertheless quite a number of important public measures, among which may be mentioned the legislation for the completion of the taking over of the Cape Cod Canal; legislation for a Federal reformatory for first offenders, proposing Camp Grant, Ill., as a site for such an institution; the legislation for a reformatory for female Federal prisoners at Mount Weather, Va.; the immigration bill; and other measures, were not reached for consideration.

THE DISTRICT BILLS WHICH FAILED.

In this condition of congestion several more or less important proposals of legislation affecting the District of Columbia failed to secure consideration, among which were the following:

The insurance bill.

The street railway consolidation bill.

The gasoline tax bill.

The school-teachers' pay bill.

I do not pretend to say that all of these proposals should have been enacted into law, but if time had sufficed they were entitled to consideration. The only one of these bills with regard to which there was any general public agitation was the teachers' pay bill, and one time and another those who were insistent upon the immediate consideration of this bill caused enough time to be lost through roll calls to have sufficed for the consideration of all the District legislation. The arguments and efforts that were made on behalf of this pay bill illustrate the need of some body, voluntary or otherwise, composed of or representing the people of the District as a whole, to pass upon legislation. Many of those who were urging the legislation had no clear idea what the bill provided. While there was much opposition in the Congress and in Washington to certain provisions of the bill, this opposition was curiously lacking in a medium to advertise its views. Perhaps the fact that the Federal Government pays a large proportion of the expenses of the District has something to do with the very apparent fact that large proposed expenditures are not carefully scrutinized by the body of the citizens. The bill in question provided, among other things, for a very considerable expenditure for community center activities which have no essential relation to the work of the schools. The fact that the measure entailed an additional immediate expenditure of several hundred thousand dollars and an eventual additional annual expenditure of approximately $1,000,000 does not seem to have received very much consideration. Undoubtedly there should be a carefully considered readjustment of the pay of the educational forces of the District, but very liberal provision could be made with much less expenditure than is proposed in the bill that failed.

A RECORD TO BE PROUD OF.

No one can question the importance of the problems which have been considered by the Congress now closing, no one can gainsay the diligence, the industry with which the Congress, particularly the House of Representatives, has addressed itself to the consideration and the settlement of these problems. They have not all been settled, it is true. That could not have been expected, but a splendid and important work has been well performed, and the Members of this House can return to their homes quite certain that the record which the House has made is one that should satisfy any reasonable constituency.

We have just been passing through a period of trying financial stress with its inevitable conditions of radical agitation and unrest. When conditions are desperate even ordinarily sane and conservative men approve novel and extraordinary measures. Fortunately we have come through that period with little in the way of legislation that will not stand the test of time, with much that will be permanently helpful. We have, in the main, practiced economy. Our legislative provisions will, I believe, prove sound and helpful.

SOME PERSONAL REFLECTIONS.

Turning now from the work of the Congress, I am tempted to submit some observations relative to membership and service here. At the close of this Congress I shall have served my constituents as a Member of the Congress 13 terms, or 26 years, and 28 years shall have elapsed since I first visited this Chamber as a Member elect. Twenty-eight years is a brief period in the tides of time, but it is a long period in the life of a man and a considerable period in the life of a nation when important history is in the making. My service here has been under six Presidents—Cleveland, McKinley, Roosevelt, Taft, Wilson, and Harding; and under five Speakers—Reed, Henderson, Cannon, Clark, and Gillett. During the period since my service began we have fought two foreign wars; we have extended our boundaries and our jurisdiction from the continent of America to the islands of the eastern and western seas and to the farthest Orient; we have united the two great oceans at Panama. We have during this period, through the force of our moral influence and without intent or purpose on our part, passed from the condition of an isolated and somewhat unimportant western power to a position of acknowledged supremacy in potential power and in high moral influence.

At home, measuring our activities by expenditures, we have progressed from an annual outlay of half a billion to the expenditure in a period of war and stress of thirty-three billions in a twelvemonth, and to a present annual outlay of nearly four billions. In my first session of Congress we discussed with apprehension of unjustifiable extravagance a naval expenditure of less than $30,000,000, the beginning of an effort to revive our Navy from the moribund condition into which it fell following the Civil War. To-day our naval policy contemplates a fleet equal to any afloat. In those days a river and harbor appropriation approximating $15,000,000 was considered a wild extravagance, as compared with the $56,500,000 of the present year.

The present annual Federal expenditure of seventy to eighty millions for public roads was undreamed of. Some years were to pass before we undertook the reclamation of our arid lands through Federal agencies. Rural free delivery had not even entered upon the period of academic discussion. Federal land banks were unthought of except in the minds of a few students of foreign agricultural credits. Women voted in general elections nowhere in the Union save in my State of Wyoming, and the eighteenth amendment had not been thought of.

If time permitted, I should be tempted to talk of the great historical events that have occurred during this period, and to some of which I have referred, to the very great changes that the period has witnessed at home and abroad, to the marvelous growth of our country, to the striking modification of viewpoint and of action as evidenced in changes in the organic and statute laws and in undertakings of administration, but all of that I shall reserve for another time and place, and the time that the House has been good enough to allot me I shall utilize rather in the discussion of the Congress, my impressions of service here and of the character and qualities of the men with whom I have been associated.

THE CONGRESS.

I can not close a service of more than a quarter of a century in this House without an expression of my high appreciation of the honor and dignity of service here, and of the splendid character of the men whom American constituencies have sent to represent them on this floor during my term of service.

I am leaving this body voluntarily and under no circumstances shall I return to it. I can not imagine any conditions under which I should ever ask a favor or a special privilege of the House; therefore I feel that no one can or will suggest that in what I say I can have any other motive than to express my views in a spirit of sincerity, actuated by no purpose other than that of placing on record my impressions of the Congress and its work through a long period of years, in the hope that a statement of these impressions may be of some value to those who have been my colleagues and to those who may come hereafter.

I think it must be recognized that legislative bodies in a free country with an unbridled press must and always will be the subject of much criticism, and that while they may from time to time be temporarily popular or, more frequently perhaps, locally popular by reason of the approval of some act of legislation, in the main and by and large and in the running of the years the public attitude, including that of a certain portion of the press, may be expected to be one of criticism, varying all the way from that of the dilettante who finds nothing quite as it should be in the conduct of public affairs, to those who for any one of a variety of reasons find it pleasing or profitable to be unfairly critical and abusive.

Do all that you may in the effort to serve the public interests, and the larger the product of your efforts the more diversified and general the criticism is likely to be because of the increased points and objects of criticism. Do all you may and all you can, even in continuous sessions, there are always requests, urgings, and demands which, unmet, fill the air with criticism and reproach. In the presence of disappointments, large and small, over matters important and unimportant, the things done and accomplished, regardless of their volume or their importance, are likely to be overlooked, forgotten, and swallowed up in the chorus of the disappointed and unsatisfied. Gratitude, which is said to be based on a lively sense of favors to come, can scarcely be expected to be widely felt toward those from whose hands and out of whose acts an increasing number of people unhappily base their expectation of aid, assistance, opportunity, and prosperity.

I think this much should be said as the background for quite a different view of the Congress and of legislative bodies in America generally which I hold and which I shall briefly express. May I venture to remind those present that my experience in the House has not only covered a very considerable period of time, but that it has been for that time rather unusually continuous? In more than a quarter of a century of service I have been out of the city of Washington and away from the Capitol less than a week of working days when the Congress was in session and legislating; and whatever may be the judgment of those who have served here as to the value of my service or the amount of my influence, I have during all my service here, I think I may venture to say, been active in the work of the House and fairly well acquainted with a wide range of its activities.

Out of this experience I desire to pay a tribute to this House, to its membership, those now here and those who have served here during the term of my service and on both sides of the aisle, a tribute of appreciation for what I believe to be and what I have always believed to be a practically unanimous and unwavering devotion to the public service; a steadfast intent and purpose to do that which would best serve the public interest, redound to the glory, the honor, and perpetuity of the Republic, the happiness and prosperity of its people.

In expressing this view of the men with whom I have served in this body, I am not honoring them more than I am the people who sent them here, for if they were not, if they had not been honest, conscientious, and faithful public servants, devoted to the interests of their constituents, what a sad and sorry reflection on their constituencies such a condition would have been. When I express my faith and confidence in the American House of Representatives I but express my faith and confidence in the people of the Nation, and as I have not had the honor of knowing intimately or well any considerable number of the constituencies of these my colleagues, I must of necessity judge those constituencies by the character of the men they choose to represent them, and thus judging them I am justified in the high opinion I have of American citizenship as reflected and represented by those whom the people choose to serve them.

LEGISLATIVE SERVICE NOT CARE FREE.

Service in the legislative body of a free people has never been an easy or care-free enterprise at any time or place, but the difficulties and responsibilities surrounding such service, particularly in the House of Representatives, have vastly increased in the passing of the years with the tremendously enlarged field of public action and activity, in which problems multiply and grow in importance and complexity with the developments of modern life and the growth of the Nation. Increased as are the difficulties and the responsibilities produced out of the conditions to which I have referred, they are still further increased by the changed attitude and relationship as between the Representative and his constituents.

In other times, when problems were comparatively few and simple, when the mails were slow, and the telephone and telegraph unknown or but little used, the Representative came to his duties here with a mind charged with the general average viewpoint and opinion of his time and his environment. He proceeded to perform his duties under the influences which had shaped his thought and molded his character, affected to a greater or lesser degree by the larger and national viewpoint which association with his colleagues, work on his committees, and participation in debate gave him.

News from the Capital City traveled to the homeland slowly, and the longhand suggestions and expressions of opinion were comparatively infrequent. The Representative was expected to and did perform his duty from the standpoint of the political principles to which he stood pledged, and of the general view of his constituents, carried out with due regard for the general public interests, as that view came to him through his associations here. But to-day the Representative arriving in Washington finds himself confronted by an amazing and confusing mass and variety of legislative proposals. The plain and simple problems of other days have given place to almost numberless suggestions and proposals of legislation and appropriation covering almost every known and every conceivable subject.

In this welter of plans and proposals the legislator, if he is wise, will become more or less of a specialist, informing himself thoroughly of those things which come within his committee's jurisdiction or of special interest to his section, and leaving to other colleagues a like duty and responsibility touching other matters, but he applies to all these problems the general view, opinion, and judgment which, formed and exercised on his native heath, won him the local good opinion which secured his seat in Congress. He soon learns, however, if he did not know before, how numerous, how active, and, in some cases, how powerful are organizations formed to promote local or sectional or class interests.

LEGISLATIVE REPRESENTATIVES.

The legislator of other days was, I have been told, besieged by the lobbyists of great interests. I never met them. We all know, however, that the legislator of to-day can scarce turn about without being confronted with the legislative representatives of a bewildering variety of interests, large and small. The great majority of the folks which these people claim to represent are entirely well intentioned—they certainly have no sinister designs upon the Republic. With the general aspirations, desires, and wishes of the classes or the organizations which they claim to or do represent we have no particular quarrel or controversy, but the trouble is that they are very frequently represented, not as to their views, opinions, and judgment on matters in general, but in relation to some particular or special plan which may not as presented represent their thoughtful purpose or be in harmony with the general public good. It may or may not fit in logically, reasonably, and wisely with the general scheme of legislation or of Federal activity.

We have reached a condition in which the political fortunes of a Member of Congress do not wholly or in the main depend upon the basic soundness of his view, his faithful attendance upon the sessions of the Congress, his earnestness and diligence and good faith in bearing his share in the performance of and responsibility for the work of the Congress, but to a very considerable extent upon the good will, the friendly attitude, the favorable reports of gentlemen who as legislative representatives sit in the galleries and, as the favored ones in the old Roman days decreed life or death to the struggling gladiator in the arena by the gesture of thumbs up or thumbs down, determine the political life and fortunes of Members of Congress.

Legislative and governmental principles and policies may be comparatively simple as outlined and propounded in general terms, but the application of principles and policies under the conditions of modern life is never simple and generally complex and difficult. The average citizen, busy with his own affairs, looks at a matter in its apparently simple and unrelated form. The Member of Congress must view it in its related and its frequently complex and trying detail. The citizen approached with regard to a plan or purpose advocated by a neighbor, associate, or friend sees it only in its most isolated, appealing, and persuasive character, and good-naturedly joins in an appeal to his Congressman. Thus during the consideration of questions and problems of the greatest complexity and importance, as the hour of final determination approaches the telephone bells jingle, the mails increase, and the wires deliver a perfect deluge of insistent appeal. Personally I have experienced but little of this character of appeal. No Representative has had a more considerate constituency than I, none has had fewer appeals from constituents on pending legislation than I, but the experience of many Members has been quite different.

How often have we noted here the effect of an organized propaganda and of its written and phoned and wired fruits. Without regard to all this pressure, those who have never experienced it will say, "The Member should ignore it if it does not square with his best judgment. Let him vote his opinion and explain it to his constituents." Ah, there is the rub. Many a signature to those communications may have been grudgingly or carelessly given to be freed from importunings or to avoid unfriendly comment. It may reflect neither knowledge nor opinion on the subject, but should a signer later be reminded in the adroit and insidious way of the propagandist of the fact that the Representative has failed to respond to his appeal—well, many a man has learned to his sorrow that a recommendation lightly made may be the basis of the most intense opposition if it is not followed.

The sneering critic of things as they are will say, "Well, what of it; why don't a man do his duty without regard to his political fortunes?" The same individual would quite likely be the first to sign a petition that he had not read in order to avoid annoyance or ill will. The man who becomes interested in and devoted to public service does not like to be defeated and his friends and party desire his success. As long as human nature remains as it is, organized propagandists will have their influence, and the blame lies not so much with those who are influenced by them as with the public that joins in or encourages propaganda. Let us not forget that, in the main, the plans and purposes of organized minorities, as cunningly stated by their proponents, have a profound appeal. Those most dangerous in their final effect upon the country may, pleasingly stated and superficially examined, appear not only harmless but highly beneficial. Therein lies their danger.

In view of the conditions I have briefly referred to and partially outlined, it is my judgment and opinion that in the long run the people of the Nation would be best served if, after having elected a Congress, they allowed it to proceed with the performance of its duties without organized and promoted propaganda and appeal. Members come here fairly well acquainted with the problems of the country and the general view and opinion of their district or their section touching them. They have the opportunity to examine the problems presented to them from every angle and viewpoint, and their best product would be that of the judgment and opinion which won them their seat in the Congress, modified and affected by the examination of facts and the exchange of opinions among members in committee and in debate on the floor. The greatest menace of the day is the menace of organized, militant, persistent minorities—minorities which dissociated from the particular object of their legislative pursuit may be among the best intentioned of our citizenship, but under the spell and spur of specious pleading and selfish appeal propose, suggest, urge, and demand the most dangerous procedure. I wish it were possible, with a view of neutralizing the effect of these minority drives, to organize all these minorities and all the balance of the people into the amalgamated society of the public interest, with their only effort and purpose that of shielding the representatives of the people from the drives of minorities seeking special favors and privilege; their accomplishment would be worthy of the highest praise.

LEGISLATIVE COURAGE.

I have expressed my confidence in the good intentions, in the honesty of my colleagues in this and other Congresses, but may I suggest the best intentions in the world will not save the Republic under the conditions to which I have referred, unless they be accompanied with a rare courage, and I sincerely regret that I can not, in good conscience, pay the high tribute to the moral courage of the Congress that I have paid and hold touching the honesty, integrity, patriotism, and good intentions of its Members. I have become so impressed with the importance of courage—the courage of one's convictions—that I have found myself with the passing of the years more and more disposed to feel charitable, even kindly, toward those whose views are furthest from those I hold, if I believe those views are held in good conscience, and particularly if they are declared in the face of opposition approaching the character of coercion.

If every vote which has been taken since I have been here were based upon the views expressed in the free confessions in the cloakroom rather than those voiced in the roll call under the pressure of militant minorities it would have been better for the country. May God speed the day when the moral courage of the Congress shall equal the integrity and the good intention of its Members.

Had I the time I should be glad to discuss the changes of our plan of organization and our method of legislation since I first came to Congress. Unfortunately there is not sufficient time to do so in these closing days of the session. I desire, however, to express the view that the House has grown in efficiency and has improved in its methods very greatly in the last 20 years. I believe that in the main the present plan of organization, the present method of appropriation, will stand, and that improvements will be made in the rules and the practice of the House under which the legislative committees will reestablish that balance of authority and jurisdiction somewhat disturbed by the practice under the Budget thus far.

CHANGES OF PROCEDURE.

Some day, in my opinion, the appropriation bills will be further consolidated. Some day the general legislation from the major legislative committees will come forth, in the main, in omnibus form. I am inclined to the opinion that it would not be a bad idea if legislation could be considered and advertised and heralded to the world in terms expressing its purpose rather than under the name of an individual. I do not wish to criticize the ambition which craves the advertising that a bill or measure under an individual's name may bring the purported author, but I do believe that in the long run we shall legislate more acceptably if the purpose rather than the individual give the name and the title to legislative proposals. Some day, and in the no distant future, I believe we shall appropriate for the calendar rather than for the fiscal year. As we increase the volume of the Federal activities that have to do with works in the open and field services we are more and more impressed with the uneconomic and impracticable character of appropriations which end and begin in the middle of the summer of the working season.

One of the problems that must be met in the near future is that of eliminating or lengthening the so-called short session. The country is so large, the field of Federal activities is so broad, the essential work of appropriation and legislation is so considerable that the period from the first Monday in December to the 4th of March no longer suffices for a fair and reasonable consideration of legislation. Just how it shall be done, just what amendment to the Constitution, if any, will be necessary, must be a matter of very careful, painstaking consideration, but the necessity has become so clearly apparent that attention and consideration should no longer be delayed.

The essential change, so as to give each Congress two sessions—one of such length as the Congress, in its judgment, may determine, and the other long enough for the transaction of essential public business—must be considered in the light of the many things that such a change affects—the date of elections, the question of appropriations, the avoidance, if possible, of long midsummer sessions of Congress.

I came to the House a stranger to national forms of legislation and procedure, impressed, I think, as every citizen of the Republic is, with the grandeur of the National Capitol and the responsible character of the public service. The novelty has long since worn off; the ways and places of legislation have become familiar, but they have not become commonplace. I leave them with an even higher regard for the dignity of service here than when I came. My respect and my affection for the membership has grown with the passing of the years. My confidence in this Chamber, in the hands of whose membership rests the destinies of the Republic, has grown firmer with the passing of time; and, praying that your constituents will give you latitude for the exercise of your good judgment, and that Providence will give you courage equal to your high purpose and good intent, I shall leave these Halls feeling that the Republic is safe in the hands of the Representatives of its people.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE.

Mr. KLINE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. KLINE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I came into the Congress three years ago. I am going out one hour and four minutes from now. [Laughter and applause.] I came here with the determination to attend as carefully as I could to my office duties and to my committee duties, and to attend the sessions of the House as much as I could; to keep eyes and ears open and talk little, for some time at least. Others must judge whether I have succeeded. These have been two delightful years, red-letter years in my life; and they have been delightful in large part because on the Republican side I found upright, honest, splendid, kindly, and courteous gentlemen. And on the Democratic side I found as well upright, honest, splendid, kindly, and courteous gentlemen.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Oh, no.

Mr. KLINE of Pennsylvania. Yes, sir; they have been nice to me. And I want to say something more—that I have found the entire delegation of the Socialist Party just as honest, upright, kindly, and courteous as any of the rest. [Applause.] It has been a great pleasure to know the delegation of the Socialist Party.

Mr. MCARTHUR. How about the drys?

Mr. KLINE of Pennsylvania. I will come to that later. I wish to thank you all for the delightful courtesy I have received at your hands. I can proclaim for the rest of my life to my friends everywhere what a splendid lot of men there are in the United States Congress. I will tell any man if he wants to see his finish and see it quickly, just offer any man in the House a thousand dollars for his vote. [Laughter and applause.] He will not live long. [Applause.]

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. KLINE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. In the gentleman's delightful and harmonious experiences, what impression have the ladies of Washington made upon him?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

COMMITTEE TO WAIT UPON THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I offer the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk, and ask that it be reported.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 577.

Resolved, That a committee of three Members be appointed by the Speaker pro tempore to join a similar committee appointed by the Senate to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that the two Houses have completed the business of the present session and are ready to adjourn unless the President has some other communication to make to them.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair appoints the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY], and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT].

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House stand in recess until 11.30.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wyoming moves that the House stand in recess until 11.30.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Accordingly (at 11 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the House stood in recess until 11.30.

AFTER RECESS.

The recess having expired (at 11 o'clock and 35 minutes a. m.), the House was called to order by Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas as Speaker pro tempore.

APPOINTMENTS TO COMMITTEES, ETC.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair announces the following appointments, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Speaker pro tempore announces that, pursuant to the act of March 3, 1923, making appropriations to provide additional compensation for certain civilian employees of the Governments of the United States and the District of Columbia during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, the Speaker appoints Mr. MADDEN, Mr. ANDERSON, and Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina as members of the joint committee to investigate adjustment of compensation of officers and employees of the legislative department.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Also the following additional appointments, which the Clerk will announce.

The Clerk read as follows:

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, of all the great men who have occupied the Speaker's chair, none has measured up in a finer way to the high standards of that exalted office than FREDERICK H. GILLETT. We regret sincerely his present illness, and we hope for his early restoration to health.

TRIBUTES TO RETIRING MEMBERS.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Speaker, I consider it a signal honor to say a word with reference to a great statesman of Illinois whose official life terminates to-day, after a half century of distinguished service in this body—JOSEPH GURNEY CANNON. [Applause, the Members rising.] Inheriting from a Quaker ancestry those distinctive principles of simplicity, honesty, and determination, his life has been characterized by those attributes.

By a singular coincidence, Mr. CANNON entered this House two days before I was born, and he and I leave the House on the same minute this day. [Applause.]

I want to say to Uncle JOE that he takes with him to his home in Danville, Ill., not only the respect and the veneration of this House, but he takes with him also the affection and the love of every Member of this body. [Applause, the Members rising.]

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas resumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] is recognized.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I take a great deal of pleasure, bespeaking the sentiment in behalf of every Democrat in this House and of the Democrats who served with him, in expressing our very deep appreciation for the goodness and the greatness of Mr. CANNON, who has been in this House longer than any other man ever served in the House of Representatives. [Applause.]

It has been my pleasure to know Uncle JOE intimately. I have learned to love him deeply, and it will be a source of satisfaction all of my life to be able to say that I have known intimately one of the greatest men and one of the greatest characters that America has produced. [Applause.]

When the history of this House is written, as it will be—when the history of the Speakers has been written—Uncle JOE CANNON will stand out in bold relief as one of the greatest men that ever occupied that position in the history of this country. And as he leaves, ripe in years and ripe in experience, he goes out of this House with every single Member of it respecting him, and the overwhelming majority loving him. I believe I express the sentiment of every heart when I say that the House of Representatives wishes for him in the days that remain to him happiness, peace, and contentment. [Applause.] May every moment that he lives be a moment of joy and happiness, and may these moments be many, and may he have the pleasure of coming back to this House, which he loves so well, many times. God bless you, Uncle JOE; you go with our love, you go with our admiration, you go with our best wishes. [Applause.]

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Speaker, at the request of several Members, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in 8-point type this tribute to Uncle JOE in a story from the Baltimore Sun—"Shed a tear for Uncle JOE, because he is leaving us to-day."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

The article is as follows:

[From the Sun, Baltimore, Sunday morning, March 4, 1923.]

SHED A TEAR FOR "UNCLE JOE," WHO QUITS TO-DAY—VETERAN HELD RECORD FOR SERVICE, HAVING BEEN IN CONGRESS FOR NEARLY HALF A CENTURY.

(By Theodore Tiller.)

WASHINGTON.—They're packing up for Danville. The midnight train leaves soon for Illinois.

The cedar chests and file cases used in the yesteryear, the scrapbooks with the newspaper stories and cartoons of other days, the letters written in Lincoln's time, published speeches of many a historic debate, routine correspondence that came in only last week—all are starting toward the West and the sunset.

"Uncle JOE" CANNON is going back home.

The packers bustle about in his two little offices just off the Chamber of the House of Representatives, wherein "Uncle JOE" has served longer than any other man. Because of his years and unprecedented service, Mr. CANNON for some time has occupied rooms adjacent to the Chamber and not in the distant House Office Building.

WENT THERE HALF CENTURY AGO.

JOSEPH GURNEY CANNON came to the House 50 years ago. With the exception of two terms, he has been here since. Twice he was overcome by Democratic landslides, but he came back two years later. To-day he quits voluntarily after 46 years of actual service, including eight years as Speaker.

Senator Justin Smith Morrill, of Vermont, who died a quarter of a century ago, nearest approached to Mr. CANNON in length of service. Combining his time in House and Senate, Senator Morrill rounded out 43 years 9 months and 25 days.

On December 29, 1920, "Uncle JOE" beat that record by one day, and the House held a great celebration. It is a tragic fact that only about two years later three of the comparative veterans in service who participated in the love feast and were mentioned in the speech of "Uncle JOE" that day are now gone.

They are Champ Clark, James R. Mann, of Illinois, and John A. Moon, of Tennessee.

RECORD-BREAKING SERVICE.

That the younger generation may grasp something of the significance of the record-breaking service of Mr. CANNON, let us trace the flight of time paragraph by paragraph, and almost each brief fact is worth a story in itself:

Of the 371 Senators, Representatives, and Delegates who were in Congress when "Uncle JOE" came here a half century ago, only two are left—Mr. CANNON and Gen. Isaac Sherwood, of Ohio, the latter one year older than the Illinois statesman.

General Sherwood was out of the House 34 years and then returned; also, he has been out the past two years, but will be a member of the next (68th) Congress.

When CANNON came to Congress James G. Blaine, the "plumed knight," was Speaker of the House. Garfield was a member of the Ohio delegation. On the floor were Hoar, of Massachusetts; Frye and Hale, of Maine; Alexander H. Stephens, of Georgia; "Sunset" Cox, of New York; Ben Butler, of Massachusetts; and Roger Q. Mills, of Texas.

DISTINGUISHED CONTEMPORARIES.

At the Senate end were Cameron, pioneer political boss of Pennsylvania; Roscoe Conklin; Henry G. Davis, of West Virginia; John J. Ingalls, of Kansas (he wrote "Opportunity"); Oliver P. Morton, of Indiana; John Sherman and Allen G. Thurman, of Ohio; Frelinghuysen and Bayard, of New Jersey, whose descendants are the Senators FRELINGHUYSEN and BAYARD of to-day.

Eleven States have been admitted to the Union since JOSEPH G. CANNON took the oath of office.

Long before the world heard of the Wright brothers and their airplane Mr. CANNON was chairman of the House Committee on Appropriations. There came before the committee Professor Langley, of the Smithsonian Institution, who asked a $10,000 appropriation to experiment in flying.

"Great heavens!" exclaimed Mr. CANNON. "A flying machine to ride up in the air. Whoever heard of such a thing?"

SO LANGLEY GOT THE MONEY.

Then Langley went ahead and pleaded that a bird was heavier than the air and could fly, and he was confident man could fly like a bird. The idea seemed preposterous to CANNON and other committee members, but Langley pleaded so, and the amount asked was small, they let him have it.

"And now," said Mr. CANNON, "the sky is filled with airplanes and human flyers, and they are implements both of commerce and war."

As the late Speaker, Champ Clark, said in one of his tributes to Representative CANNON:

"When he was born at Guilford Courthouse, N. C., in 1836, there were no railroads, no telegraphs or telephones; no sewing machines, flying machines, repeating rifles, and a thousand other things deemed necessary to our modern civilization."

MECHANICAL REVOLUTION.

"Uncle JOE" himself recounts that since that day his folks left Guilford Court House and started westward, saying "Good-by, civilization," as they began their trek to Illinois, he has seen come the reaper and the mower; the gang plow and the whole revolution in agriculture; the telegraph, telephone, and now the radio; the electric railroad; the submarine and the airplane; the typewriter and the modern printing press.

One of the most effective speeches ever made in the House was that of Mr. CANNON in 1916, when he defended a bill creating the American Academy of Arts and Letters and the immortals it proposed to name. Recalling the prairie schooner of his youth, he concluded:

"Now, then, take art. I do not know how many of you have gone to the western end of the Capitol and seen on the wall that picture entitled 'Westward the Star of Empire Takes Its Way.' A great artist, I can not recall his name now, painted that picture on the wall. There it is. It represents the pioneer from the Atlantic coast on his way westward.

"There are the steer and the mule hitched up together; there is the woman with the babe in her arms, sitting in the wagon; there is the little grave by the side of the road; and there is the pioneer with his coonskin cap and the little boy with his coonskin cap, the grandson or the son, carrying a rifle, followed by the faithful dog; another stands upon the mountain and looks to the westward.

"Ah, Mr. Speaker, I was a part of that picture in a way, and by that I mean I experienced most of what it represented in the pioneer days; and as I looked upon that picture the first time, though I am not given much to tears, I caught myself crying. And during all the years since I have never glanced toward it without saying to myself, 'God bless the man who painted that picture!'"

IN WHIMSICAL VEIN.

In more whimsical vein was "Uncle JOE" on the day he exceeded Senator Morrill in length of service. Addressing the House, every Member having risen to his feet cheering, the old man from Danville said concerning the year of his first election:

"The year of 1872 was a memorable one in many respects. Vesuvius had a violent eruption that year, and General Sherwood and I were elected to the House. There were other happenings—the organization of the German Empire and the French Republic, the emancipation of slaves in Porto Rico, the connection of Australia with the rest of the world by cable, the great Boston fire, and the Geneva award of the Alabama claims. But these concerned the world at large, while the election of my friend and colleague, General Sherwood, and myself was personal; and I am glad he is here to share with me the doubtful honor of elder statemen.

"I am reminded that our honorable Speaker [Mr. GILLETT] and his predecessor [Mr. Clark] were approaching the polls to cast their first votes that year, Mr. GILLETT no doubt voting for General Grant, who had only a few years before been considered a good Democrat, and Mr. Clark voting for Horace Greeley, who was still a stalwart Republican and Protectionist, though transplanted for a few brief weeks to the leadership of the Democratic Party.

"Jim Mann, aged 16, was no doubt beginning his struggle with rival ambitions to continue a farmer or become a lawyer, and I am glad his perverse nature monopolized his ambition until to-day he is an ornament to both professions, a true scientific farmer and the most industrious and useful lawmaker I have ever known.

"My friends RAINEY and MONDELL, at the age of 12, were beginning to figure life in percentages, while RODENBERG, at the age of 7, was winning his way with 'You'd scarce believe one of my age,' and the ambitions of CLAUDE KITCHIN and NICK LONGWORTH, at the age of 3, were centered about their first pants. Looking around me I find more than 100 of my colleagues to-day who had not even been born * * * and I feel that 1872 must have been a long way back in the history of the House."

Still in whimsical mood we find "Uncle JOE" saying recently:

PLACE OF THE REFORMER.

"I suppose a reformer has his place. I sometimes think they get pretty thick. They say that their province is to fight with the Almighty; that the Almighty and one are a majority. Well, they have their place; I am not here to abuse them. Nearly all of them are honest, but once in a while we find one who is a hypocrite, makes his living by being a reformer, but who would think of one of them as a Member of Congress or a President * * *? Reform is a much abused word in Government affairs. When I hear men talk about Government reform I am reminded of a newspaper waif I read many years ago:

I'm thankful that the sun and moon
Are both hung up so high
That no pretentious hand can stretch
And pull them from the sky.
If they were not, I have no doubt
But some reforming ass
Would recommend to take them down
And light the world with gas.

There are a thousand anecdotes about and by this remarkable man from Danville, Ill. He has "stood for" many a story that he never told. He has been cartooned, caricatured, and photographed thousands of times. In the day of so-called "Cannonism" the caricatures—most of them—were unfriendly and carried a sting that got under the quick of even "Uncle JOE." In recent years, now that the American public and his political enemies have found that Mr. CANNON did not possess horns and that certain of his "gag rule" methods have been necessary since to control the House, the newspaper stories and cartoons have carried the touch of kindness and a better understanding. Everybody is glad that Mr. CANNON has lived long enough to see it.

SAYINGS OF CANNON.

That brings one to a favorite expression of his—and he has several maxims:

"The pendulum will swing back" is perhaps his best, a trite way of saying that in life and politics issues rise and fall and the things accursed to-day may be the things acclaimed tomorrow.

Other Cannonesque sayings with a punch include:

"Nearly all legislation is the result of compromise."

"A majority can do anything."

"In the last analysis sound judgment will prevail."

"In legislation we all do a lot of 'swapping tobacco across the lines.'"

"You can't make a silk purse out of a sow's ear, and you can't change human nature from intelligent self-interest into pure idealism—not in this life; and if you could, what would be left for paradise?"

In connection with "swapping tobacco across the lines," as they did in the Civil War, Mr. CANNON has told how he put through an appropriation for the entertainment of Prince Henry of Prussia when that foreign visitor came over years ago. He prearranged with OSCAR W. UNDERWOOD, then in the House, that he would propose the appropriation late in the afternoon, when the House attendance was slim. Mr. UNDERWOOD, representing objecting Democrats, was to kick strenuously for a time about the cost of entertaining the prince; then UNDERWOOD was reluctantly to withdraw his opposition, the chances being no other Democrat would take it up.

The "swapping of tobacco" across the aisles worked and the appropriation went through.

REARED A QUAKER.

JOSEPH G. CANNON was brought up in the Quaker Church. In the days of his youth the Quakers were strong for discipline. A rule was that no member of the Friends Church might marry outside the faith without getting consent of the elders; if he so married, he must come afterwards and express regret and get the forgiveness of the elders.

Young CANNON married a Methodist. The church elders insisted that he should express regret, this demand being made a week after the marriage.

"I'll be damned if I do," said CANNON, with the independence revealed in later life. "If you had waited a year or so after I married the young lady, I might have expressed regret, but I won't do it this soon."

And JOSEPH G. CANNON never did "regret" that happy marriage.

HIS FIRST DISTINCTION.

As a young legislator CANNON received his first real notoriety in the time of a Democratic adversary, "Sunset" Cox, of New York, one of the brilliant debaters of the past generation. CANNON asked Cox to yield time for a statement.

"I'll do it as long as the gentleman keeps his left hand in his pocket," said "Sunset" Cox. CANNON started in to speak, warmed up a bit, and pulled out his left hand and waved it high above his head, a gesture characteristic to this day.

"Time's up," said Cox, and the House and galleries knew CANNON from then on.

The House probably never again will see the like of "Uncle JOE" nor record a record of service like his. As put by Representative WILLIAM A. RODENBERG, of his State, no Republican under 71 years of age in the eighteenth Illinois district has ever voted for a Republican nominee except CANNON. Champ Clark thought it would be a hundred years or more before Congress would furnish a Member of such length of service as that of CANNON—and Clark must have been thinking the men of the future would learn to live longer than men do now.

PREPARING FOR FUTURE.

The other night Mr. CANNON gave a farewell reception to members of the Gridiron Club and a few other newspaper men of Washington. There were songs and speeches and laughter. "Uncle JOE" sat with a far-away look in his eyes as the Gridiron quartet sang "Annie Laurie" and other favorites of the long ago. Soon after he turned to Representative WILLIAM S. GREENE, of Massachusetts, who has been in the House 26 years.

"BILL GREENE," he said, "you are just a youngster, only 82 years old. Well, I'm going to give a party on my one hundredth birthday and you are invited to come."

"I'll be there, JOE, if I am living," said BILL GREENE.

It was an appealing picture. And another followed it. JOE CANNON put his arms around the shoulders of JOE FORDNEY, of Michigan, who quits Congress after 24 years, and FORDNEY threw his arms about the shoulders of his friend. Patting one another on the back they started to get FORDNEY's overcoat and say good night.

Side by side they had fought many a legislative battle—these two. Each quits voluntarily because he's tired. As they walked toward the doorway where the car of the gray-haired FORDNEY awaited them, RODENBERG, of Illinois, a younger man, who goes out of Congress of his own accord, turned and with a little mist showing in his eyes, said:

"I don't like to see things like that."

And neither did the rest of them—regardless of creed, political belief, or age.

In paraphrase of a line of CANNON's favorite poem, by James Whitcomb Riley:

"Good-by, Uncle JOE; take keer o' yourself."

Mr. MADDEN. The Speaker pro tempore is about to leave us. He has served with distinction for more than 20 years in this body. No man who has ever served here has rendered more efficient service than PHILIP PITT CAMPBELL. [Applause.] We regret to see him go. God be with him wherever he goes and in whatever he may do. He takes with him the love and affection of every Member of the House, their confidence and their esteem. We wish him Godspeed and great success in whatever he may undertake to do. [Applause.]

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, if it is possible for any other Member to occupy in the hearts of this House the same position that is occupied by one who was so long known by the name of Uncle JOE, there is another Uncle JOE, the gentleman from Michigan. [Applause.] Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] entered this House some years ago. He has come up from the most lowly beginnings to the highest position, as we think, that any Member may reach, as chairman of a committee. In that place he has shown an extraordinary vigor and force and left his impress as no other man upon the great measures of tariff and revenue which have been passed by this Congress and which we on this side believe to be an unexampled success. Mr. Speaker, he has the love and affection not only of the committee he has so long presided over but I know he has the love, affection, regard, and esteem of this House, which will follow him through all the days of his life. We wish him Godspeed. [Applause.]

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, we have all of us on both sides of the Chamber very greatly regretted the absence from the sessions of this Congress of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN]. Fortunately for his party, his place here has been ably filled. We all join in wishing him a speedy restoration to sound health, and happiness and prosperity all his days.

Mr. Speaker, it would not be seemly or in accordance with the wishes of the Members of this House to allow the session to close without calling attention to the fact that the country is about to lose the services, temporarily at least, with the close of this Congress of two splendid women Members of the House. [Applause.]

The lady from Illinois [Mrs. HUCK] will, of course, soon return to these Halls and continue her legislative career. We wish her success in her ambitions along that line. The lady from Oklahoma [applause] tells us, as many other departing Members have told us, that she does not desire or expect to return to the House. We hope that she may return. The country will benefit by her service. [Applause.] It is admitted by all who have served in this House that the quality most needed, the quality most essential here, is that of courage, and this quality is and has been possessed by Miss ALICE ROBERTSON, of Oklahoma, to a marked degree. [Applause.] No one who has ever served here has given closer or more intelligent and earnest attention and consideration to the business of the House, and none has exhibited finer courage under all circumstances and conditions. [Applause.] We wish her well in her retirement to her home in Oklahoma, and the country will be well served if she concludes some day to return to service here. [Applause.]

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE TO NOTIFY THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, your committee appointed to join a like committee of the Senate to notify the President that the House had concluded its work and was ready to adjourn, announces that this duty has been performed. The President has notified us that he has no further communication to make to us, and bids us Godspeed and a temporary farewell.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Members of the House of Representatives, the last 10 days of this session have not been conducive to reflection by the presiding officer. Therefore, the usual address to the departing Members by the Speaker can only be this: You are the guardians of the institutions that have preserved and protected the liberties and the opportunities of the American people. It is your duty, as it will be the duty of those who shall follow you, to keep sacred, inviolate, all of the traditions and the institutions that have so gloriously ministered to the welfare and the happiness of the people of this Republic for a century and a half. Let nothing beguile you when you return to your constituents to yield to the seductive and plausible opportunities that may be presented for speech that leads one away from the fundamental principles of the Government of the United States. [Applause.]

Members of the House of Representatives, more than any other agency in this Republic, should teach the people of the Republic what the Constitution of the United States means, what it is, what this Government is. Preserve it for future generations as it has been handed down to us by the generations that have passed. This is the duty of the Representatives of the American people in the Congress of the United States.

May I add this: If any of you, now Members, have an ambition to become the Speaker of the House of Representatives, take up your duties at the beginning of the session of Congress rather than at the end. [Laughter.] You will then mature into the situation far better than by being thrust into the work the last days of the strenuous work that is always incident to the closing days of the Congress.

I bid you one and all Godspeed, and that you and yours may enjoy health and happiness, and that you will be able to mingle with your constituents to your good and theirs and return here better prepared for your duties as Representatives of the American people than ever before.

The hour of 12 o'clock noon having arrived, I declare the Sixty-seventh Congress adjourned without day.
